THIS MEANS SOMETHING

When one of the country's most prominent exhibitors endorses a production for the first time in his life

This Means Something

That's precisely what Herbert L. Rothschild, of the California Theatre, San Francisco, did when he wired Hiram Abrams, President of United Artists, regarding the business "Salvation Hunters" did in his theatre.

This means something, this telegram—

"'Salvation Hunters' now playing our California Theatre, broke all records of seven years' standing on its two opening days. No picture of recent years has developed as much discussion as 'Salvation Hunters' and we anticipate extraordinary business."

A drama of powerful appeal

Here is a production that carries a real box-office punch — a tremendous story of big business, love and loyalty, in which a charming widow is left in trust to three men, who endeavor to trade her youth and beauty as if she was so much stock with a "market value." A blue ribbon cast in support of Miss Ayres includes Taylor Holmes, Edward Earle, Hedda Hopper and George Irving. If you want to play to a real profit and send your patrons away happy and satisfied BOOK "HER MARKET VALUE."

"The Mansion of Aching Hearts" To Be Released February 27th

B. P. Schulberg Picturizes Famous Ballad Which Sold Over A Million Copies

In every American home the song by Harry Von Tilzer and Arthur J. Lamb is known and loved. Around its theme has been woven a screen drama of exceptional power, directed by James P. Hogan, the man who filmed "Capital Punishment".

Ethel Clayton returns to the screen in "The Mansion of Aching Hearts" and in the supporting cast are Cullen Landis, Barbara Bedford and Sam de Grasse.

David Belasco's "The Boomerang" Is Scheduled For Early Showings

Special Schulberg Production To Follow "The Mansion of Aching Hearts"

Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell and Donald Keith, the screen's new wonder-youth, head the cast of this world famous comedy drama. The stage play ran for two seasons in New York and has been presented in every sizeable town of the country.

John Goodrich adapted the manuscript by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes. Gasnier, director of money-makers, is proud to list "The Boomerang" with his many other box-office productions.

Remarkable evidence of the Unfailing Quality of all Educational Pictures

Exhibitors' reports from just two issues of Moving Picture World and Exhibitors Herald

From Exhibitors Herald

THE MISFIT. (Clyde Cook Comedy)—Good comedy, as are most all Educationals. Two reels.—A. G. Witwer, Grand Theatre, Rainier, Ore.—Small town patronage.

NAVY BLUES. (Christie Comedy)—Just about the cleverest comedy in a long time. Has plot and is fast and furious. The sailors of the big battleship California had about as much fun helping to make it as did the audience that looked at it. A very satisfactory offering, as are most of the Educationals.—Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.—General patronage.

PEST OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (Mermaid Comedy) with Louise Fazenda.—A comedy everyone enjoyed. Two reels.—W. D. Patrick, Strand Theatre, Dothan, Ala.—General patronage.

PLASTIGRAMS. (Special)—The first novelty reel I have ever used that I felt that it paid for itself and drew enough extra business for a profit besides. You will make no mistake in running this reel.—Russell Armentrout, K. P. Theatre, Pittsfield, Ill.—General patronage.

PLASTIGRAMS. (Special)—One of the best novelty pictures I have ever seen. Best of comments from all who saw it.—W D. Patrick, Strand Theatre, Dothan, Ala.—General patronage.

POOR BOY. (Mermaid Comedy) with Lloyd Hamilton.—Another good comedy that will get the laughs. This is saying something now-a-days as it sure takes extra good comedy to get a laugh. Two reels.—W. J. Shoup, De Luxe Theatre, Spearville, Kan.—Small town patronage.

DESERT BLUES. (Cameo Comedy). Star, Cliff Bowes. One of the new Cameo comedies and it is a good one. The gags pulled off in this one are good. We had many a laugh out of this one. Tone, good. Good audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DIZZY DAISY. (Jack White Comedy Special). A peach of a comedy with everybody pleased with it. It sure has some good comedy stunts in it. You don't want to miss this one. Tone, okay. Good audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DIZZY DAISY. (Jack White Comedy Special). A continuous laugh from start to finish. If you want comedy don't overlook this one. One they will howl over and no let ups. All classes, but white only. Admission 10-20-25. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

GOING EAST. (Hamilton Comedy). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Good comedy. Many places for laughs. No one will go wrong on booking Lloyd Hamilton. We like him better every time. Luck to you, old boy, we like your style. All classes, but white only. Admission 10-20-25. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

EASTER BONNETS. (Tuxedo Comedy). One continuous laugh, all old stuff in this, but oh, boy, how the people did howl. Grab it and listen to them yell. Sunday, yes. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

KINOGRAMS. (News Reel). About the best news I have ever shown. Tone, good. General audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-15, 15-35. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

RAPID FIRE, BACK FIRE. (Mermaid Comedies) with Lige Conley.—These are old but prints are good and are sure fire. You cannot go wrong on them. Two reels.—F. W. McClelland, Rex Theatre, Gilman City, Mo.—Small town patronage.

RIDE 'EM COWBOY. (Christie Comedy) with Bobby Vernon.—Good comedy. Lots of action. Pleased the kids and Western fans. Two reels.—A. G. Witwer, Grand Theatre, Rainier, Ore.—Small town patronage.

FAMILY LIFE. (Mermaid Comedy)—A dandy comedy. This one sure got the laughs. Two reels.—J. W. Andresen, Rialto Theatre, Cozad, Neb.—General patronage.

GOOD NEWS. (Cameo Comedy)—Mighty good for a one reeler.—S. G. Ihde, Photoplay Theatre, Ashland, Kans.—Small town patronage.

STUPID BUT BRAVE. (Tuxedo Comedy) with Al St. John.—A very good comedy that pleased. Clifford L. Niles, Grand Theatre, Anamosa, Ia.—General patronage.

WRECKS. (Cameo Comedy)—Another good comedy that your patrons will like and laugh at. One reel.—W. A. Doerschlag, Strand Theatre, Ransom, Kan.—Small town patronage.

DON'T HESITATE. (Cameo Comedy)—Good one-reel comedy. Cameos are good fillers for your long features. Try them. One reel.—A. D. Brawner, Jewel Theatre, Hooker, Okla.—Small town patronage.

FLYING FINANCE. (Mermaid Comedy)—A very good comedy that pleased.—Clifford L. Niles, Grand Theatre, Anamosa, Ia.—General patronage.

THE LIMIT. (Cameo Comedy)—An exceptionally good comedy and gets the laughs. Film good. One reel.—W. A. Doerschlag, Strand Theatre, Ransom, Kan.—Small town patronage.

From Moving Picture World

HIGH LIFE. (Mermaid Comedy). A very good comedy, laughs galore. Factory class town of 2,800. Admission 10-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

JACK WHITE PRODUCTIONS. (Mermaid Comedies). The most consistent two reelers on the market today. Everyone a knockout. Speed, action and laughs galore in every one. Tone, okay, Sunday, yes. Very good audience appeal. Suburban class town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

KID SPEED. (Larry Semon Special Comedy). Star, Larry Semon. A real comedy with more thrills and spills than ever before put in a comedy. We class it as the very best comedy for many moons. James J. Jeffries in the cast helps get 'em in. Buy "Kid Speed." Boost it and it will not fail to please. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeals to everyone. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

NEVER AGAIN. (Tuxedo Comedy). Star, Al St. John. One of the best comedies of the year and no doubt of it. If you fail to laugh at this one call in the family physician, for you are going to need him soon. Tone, good. Ideal for Sunday. Appeals to everyone. Best class, town of 8,000. Admission 10-30. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

HOT AIR. (Mermaid Comedy). Star, Lee Moran. Hot towels. Here is an honest to gosh comedy. It has a laugh in every inch of film. An extra good comedy in every respect. Tone, good. Great audience appeal. Better class. town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MIDNIGHT BLUES. (Jack White Comedy Special). Star, Lige Conley. Do you want to make them laugh? Then book this. The second reel is a knockout. Sunday, yes. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Norma Talmadge in "The Lady"

They All Said: "It's Her Greatest"

"'The Lady' is the best thing Norma Talmadge has ever done," said Harriet Underhill, in the New York Tribune, the morning after the opening at the Colony. Several other reviewers used practically the same words. . . . "A humdinger," shouted the Evening Post. . . . The Graphic felt that Broadway had not seen "a better story, better directed or better acted in many moons." . . . "Worth an hour and a half of any one's time," said the Times.

In other words, New York agrees that "The Lady" tops anything she has ever done . . . and translated into movie talk, this means—"It's a wow!"

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

ONE delightful phase of this business is that there are always "problems" to discuss. No matter about last night's box office, or today's bread and butter—if you must push the personal from your thoughts there is always someone to be found who will spend hours arguing, "What is the outlook?" and "Whither are we drifting?"

Sometimes the problems are so one-sided—conversationally—that they grow monotonous in the telling. But always, just around the corner, there is a development that upsets the well-ordered calculations and gives new impetus to the argument.

Some few months ago we had the experience of the monotonously settled phase. The "whither are we drifting" question had only one answer. "The business is drifting into the hands of ——," and then you heard from one to five companies mentioned, according to the individual speaking.

Now we have the bombshell period. DeMille with Producers Distributing; Joseph Schenck marshaling the United Artists forces; other rumors in the offing.

Once more it is a free for all argument.

THERE is a thought that came to us, however, as we witnessed the inspiringly thrilling premiere of "The Man Without a Country."

William Fox seems to hold a position all his own in the arguments. It is an enviable position. On the one hand, in all the discussion of the dread future no one seems to have any desire to throw any bricks in the direction of William Fox; on the other, his organization is too solidly set, his position too well recognized, for even the presumptuous to attempt to offer sympathy in advance of the Doomsday that is approaching the industry.

A pleasant position, assuredly.

And a tribute louder than many colorful words to the man carrying the banner and the associates guarding the colors.

HERE'S another angle: Go over the William Fox history and you find it pretty hard to discover any "accidents" to which to ascribe the credit for a growth that has been consistent, and a present position that is unquestionably strong.

Go back to the Box Office Attractions days, and follow the story. And read between the lines the evidence of clear, constructive planning, of foresight, and of unwavering courage.

It didn't take many Box Office Attractions days for Fox to know that he would need his own national system of exchanges. He got it. It didn't take many months of Fox Film Corporation for him to decide that to give the foreign market what it deserved, and to get from it what the corporation deserved, called for a world wide organization answering to a single set of reins. He has it.

Product? What is it the market wants? Big pictures? Moderately priced entertainment? A news weekly? Educationals? Comedies? William Fox answers the market—and that's planning.

Look at a present that includes "The Iron Horse," "The Man Without a Country," "The Fool," and a future that promises "Havoc," "Lightnin'," "Lazybones," and so on.

WE opened with mention of the industry's much-discussed "problems," and have proceeded at great extent to reach this point: Don't overlook William Fox in any discussion of those problems.

He has theatres enough for his purpose, yet not enough to arouse cries of "competition;" a corporation as firmly intrenched financially as any in the industry; an organization world-wide in reach yet closely-knit in operation, and production schedules at the moment including some of the biggest things the industry has seen. The John Golden association is an example.

Stick a pin in the name of William Fox on the map of the battleground. And if you want to discuss without mentioning Fox—that's your privilege. But keep a weather eye on the pin.

First in the field!

Speaking Freely

How'd ya like to be a P. D. C. manager or salesman these days? Just when the boys get a Santa Claus present in the shape of "Charlie's Aunt" and the enthusiasm passes the 220 Fahrenheit mark along comes news of the De Mille deal. Shucks, how's a feller going to feel any happier than just plain deliriously happy? If you've ever stood in the shoes of a manager or salesman you know how news like that from the far-off home office can make you feel. Yea boy! It can't be described, nor bought for cash.

I guess big leaguers just have to be big leaguers—you can't keep them down in the minors. John Flinn and Paul Mooney have been playing the film game on the big circuit—and that's all there is to it.

Speaking of "Charley's Aunt" reminds us that an editor doesn't get much opportunity to write random personalities these days if he tries to keep up with all the worth while pictures. "The Lost World," "Charley's Aunt," "The Man Without a Country," next Sunday "Quo Vadis," just around the corner "The Fool," and in the offing "The Phantom of the Opera." Not to forget that "The Lady" is Norma's best-ever, and "Recompense" has Warner Brothers feeling pretty cheerful.

With all the rush of picture-going we will have to try and catch Benny Schulberg while he is in town. It isn't fair for Benny to come in and run out that way.

First National's executive committee meeting has passed into history, but we see an unusual number of familiar faces around the Ambassador and other rooming houses this week. Something doing?

The M. P. T. O. of New Jersey is going to dine "Pete" Woodhull in Newark on March 4th. With eclat and dignity—prominent guests in abundance. Try and keep us away.

And that also reminds us. We would suggest to exhibitor organization officials that they get in touch with President Seider, of Jersey, and ask for a copy of "The Organization Bulletin." First issue has come to our desk. A neat and effective job. Paying its way also—thanks to a back cover ad from our friend, Joe Hornstein. Not so big as to eventually come a cropper when the printer has to be paid and the work to be done; but big enough to carry the message of the organization to its members. Well done, Senor Seider.

Bob Pritchard, who deserted Rogers Restaurant for the confines of Hollywood, is again back in our midst as the vanguard of the First National migration. Indefinitely.

Rumored that Warner Brothers and P. D. C. may get together on theatre building plans if necessary to handle the controlled first run situation. What's a little rumor between friends?

Stopped to talk to a theatre seat salesman Wednesday night and by the time he got half through telling us of all the new houses going up in various parts of the country, he had us dizzy.

But don't think because of all the new ones that we are ever going to reach that famous and fictitious "fifteen thousand theatre" stage. "All the new ones are big ones," said the seat man. "And each big one means about four small ones on the way out. If you can find ten thousand theatres for me when it is all over I'll say you're good."

It's funny how that "fifteen thousand" figure persists. I've seen company mailing lists that run up to twenty thousand. But I'd hate to pay the bill on the waste matter that goes to such lists. Any man who has been in close touch with trade paper circulation work for the past two years knows that good roads and up-to-date houses in "the nearest big town" are killing off the small fellows like flies. And he would hesitate a long time before he would give you his oath that there are fifteen thousand theatres. Yet every once in a while someone will tell you there is something wrong with the trade papers because none can approach fifteen thousand circulation.

It's rather rare in this business of receiving an editor's mail that we get a letter from one man boosting another. It's an event unusual enough for us to give you any such letters in full. So here goes:

Los Angeles, Calif.,

DEAR BOB:

In your issue of December 20th, on your Editorial page, "Speaking Freely," I noticed your nice little boost for me.

I am taking the occasion to write you and thank you for it, particularly the fact that you appreciate that I have been trying my best, at least, with unworthy jobs until I came with First National. I think perhaps the effort to give 100% on something that I knew wasn't 20% will tell in the long run for any of us, and we do have to keep that wolf from the door, don't we?

But it isn't on this account that I am writing you. I am writing to add my word of appreciation for Earl Hudson. He deserves all the fine things that you can say for him. So far as I am concerned, my right arm or my right eye, if it would do him any good because, after all is said and done, there are hundreds standing without the gates and no one to open them that they may come in.

Such friendly help should be recognized by those who are helped and the fact that you publicly opened the way, gives me this opportunity of saying something along the same lines where, coming cold, it might have been misunderstood.

Wishing you and the Moving Picture World the very finest success for the coming year and with kindest personal regards to Epes Sargent, Sewell, Van and the bunch, including yourself, I am

Most sincerely yours,

HARRY O. HOYT.

Germany Changes Rules on Import and Licensing for Foreign Films

Garbled Report Clarified; Trading in Permits Rendered Obsolete

By W. STEPHEN BUSH

THE German government has once more changed the rules and regulations for the import and the licensing of foreign films. A rather confusing and somewhat premature statement concerning these changes has recently been sent over the wires of an international news association. If there was any chance of succeeding, the government would gladly banish all foreign films, but it cannot do so because Germany produces only about one-fourth of the films it needs. There are between 3,500 and 4,000 motion picture theatres in the country, and despite the oppressive taxation business has been improving. Patronage has increased both in quantity and quality. The screen is no longer the exclusive entertainment for the poorer classes.

Germany needs at least 400 features a year, and her own producers can scarcely supply more than a hundred. Unable to dispense with the foreign films, which in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred means American films, the government does what it can to put obstacles in the way of foreign competition. It permits the importation of any foreign film on payment of a small duty, but it will not license the exhibition of this same foreign film except upon all kinds of restrictive conditions. Here are the conditions briefly summarized in English:

1. Permits for the exhibition of foreign films after the 13th of January, 1925, will only be issued if the applicant is able to furnish proofs that he distributes a German made film of equal length. No permit will be granted upon an application, which is supported only by the distribution of a German film obviously made for the sole purpose of obtaining a permit for the placing of a foreign film.

2. Applications for permits to exhibit foreign films will only be entertained if made by renters who are domiciled in Germany.

3. All foreign comedies or educational films, weeklies, scientific films without a dramatic plot, cartoons and similar subjects are exempted from the conditions set out in paragraphs one and two if they do not exceed 500 metres (about 1,500 feet) in length.

4. All applications for permits to exhibit foreign pictures, and all evidence submitted in support thereof, are to be examined and passed upon by a board consisting of six representatives of different branches of the industry. Four members of this board shall constitute a quorum. An appeal lies from the decisions of the board to the government. All applications for permits to exhibit foreign films must be made before the 15th of February, 1925. After the 15th of February all applications will be passed on only from case to case. In no case will the board give an immediate decision.

From all of this it will be seen that permits for the exhibition of foreign films are no longer granted to producers as heretofore, but are given exclusively to distributors "domiciled in Germany." American firms find themselves compelled to distribute their features through such domestic exchanges. The old rule, requiring that for every American film imported into Germany there must be shown the export of a German film into the States, has been abrogated, putting an end to the illegal but highly profitable trading in permits for foreign films.

The Germans keep on wondering why they cannot sell their films on the right side of the water.

They gave a rather formal banquet in honor of Sam Goldwyn. Dr. Kallman, of the Ufa, and Eric Pommer, of the Decla Film Co., arranged the affair on the lot of the Decla, in one of the suburbs of Berlin, and made quite a success of it in a social way.

The two German film men said they wanted to repay Mr. Goldwyn's generous hospitality shown to them on their recent visit to Hollywood. All the big wigs of the German film industry were present, including an official of the government, several press agents and the president of the theatre owners association of Berlin.

Somehow, the impression seemed to have lodged itself in the minds of the banqueters that Sam Goldwyn was trying to qualify as a Santa Claus for the German producers, but before the night had passed the genial Sam appeared to them more in the shape of a Sphinx.

Through all the speeches made by the hosts and fellow guests of the American one could hear the question: "Mr. Goldwyn, what do you think of our beautiful German films, and aren't you going to buy any from us?"

Rental in Europe Wiser Than Sale Outright, Fraser Finds After Trip

Three Months' Survey of Continental Conditions Helps Conclusion

AFTER three months spent in practically every important film center of Europe, William R. Fraser, general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, has returned to Los Angeles with an interesting insight into motion picture conditions abroad, as they affect American productions.

Mr. Fraser gave considerable attention to the question that long has been an important one for the American independent producer in particular, that of the outright sale of foreign rights to his feature attractions or their sale on a guarantee and percentage basis. Mr. Fraser is firmly of the conviction that the latter method is the one which will benefit most, not only the American producer, but his European agent, and the exhibitors of the continent and the British Isles as well.

"By retaining a percentage interest in our pictures," declared Mr. Fraser last week, "we can spur on our European representatives to greater efforts, while he in turn will give the exhibitor even more help than in the past, in putting over his product. I noticed that whenever pictures were being handled in Europe on a percentage arrangement, the exploitation of the product was better than in instances where the productions were sold outright.

"The interest of the American producer in the European handling of his product is bound, in time, to bring about a better situation so far as prints, projection and exhibit are concerned, for the producer is certain to want his product given every advantage from an exhibition standpoint.

"European exhibitors and distributors are welcoming all the co-operation, and assistance they can get from American film men. I think one great trouble in the past has been that Americans have paid too little attention to the European market. American film leaders have gone abroad ostensibly to dig into conditions, and do what they could to improve them yet their investigations for the most part have been very superficial. They accepted the surface conditions as the real situation, when as a matter of fact a little closer inspection would have disclosed much different problems. This is just another argument in favor of the rental, rather than the outright sale of American pictures in Europe. It will compel American manufacturers and distributors to give more attention to the actual conditions abroad; will encourage them to help improve them, where they need bettering; and will obtain for the European distributor and exhibitor a higher type of picture, rather than some of the junk that has been disposed of abroad. American producers have been all to prone to sell their product abroad and then forget it.

"Europe is a great field for the American producer. Properly developed, with the supply of picture meeting the ever increasing demand of Europeans for better pictures, it will prove a source of tremendous revenue for the American magnates. European exhibitors have been educating their patrons to a higher class of entertainment, and as a consequence they are finding their box office figures growing constantly. While we were in Paris, Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last" opened a long run engagement at the Cameo Theatre there. They put on an exploitation campaign that surpassed many staged for the same picture by foremost American exhibitors noted for being able to put them over. A good show was built around the feature, and as a consequence, the picture broke every record for the house since its erection ten years ago.

"This is merely another evidence that the people of Europe, whether they be of London, Paris, Berlin or Stockholm, will give their support to the right kind of picture, properly exploited.

"So far as I was able to judge, film conditions in Europe are now in better shape than at any time since the war. Except in a few centers where local conditions affected the situation, this was true of every country we visited, and we travelled through England, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Austria, Italy, Czecho-Slovakia, Hungary, and the Scandinavian countries.

"American players are extremely popular in practically all the centers we visited, and with a few exceptions the stars who are big 'draws' here, are well liked throughout Europe.

"Better theatres are springing up all over Europe. In England we found many of the finest theatres which heretofore were almost wholly in their legitimate drama traditions, have been turned into homes of the cinema.

"American pictures have been responsible for the elimination of much of the feeling the Germans held against the United States following the war. American stars are very popular in Germany, and several have

Italy Would Welcome An American "Filming Invasion," Says Simone

By CHARLES SIMONE

MUSSOLINI'S great leadership and the Italian's earnest desire for peace and prosperity have saved Italy from the brink of Bolshevism and placed her firmly upon solid financial foundations. The Italian people have seen the light; they are alive to the fact that a happy state of mind comes from within; they know that if they would have prosperity they must strive for it, and thus, urged on by the same uncommon common sense and one common impulse, they are hard at work accomplishing wonders, and have already set a brilliant example for the rest of the war-weary world.

Italians, as a rule, admire and like Americans; their liking is peculiarly akin to worship. Italians who have been in the United States and return to their Fatherland steadily and enthusiastically sow the seed of pro-Americanism. Americans in Italy (tourists, residents, students, etc.) do much to strengthen Italy's good will and amity for America.

American enterprises in Italy are thriving, safe and profitable; there is room for more, especially for motion picture producing. Unquestionably Italy is nature's film studio par excellence. Comparisons are odious. Climate, scenery, sunlight, favorable labor conditions, etc., all unite in proclaiming Italy the best place for making pictures, no matter how ancient or how modern the theme.

There are some sixty odd studios in Italy, the majority of them located in Turin and Rome. Except for a sporadic production, these studios are now closed and many of them have been actually abandoned for years. The best of them are not to be compared with the fine American studios; they are, however, in accessible and magnificent locations and could, at no great cost, be altered to suit.

CHARLES SIMONE

Picture producing in Italy is practically at a standstill, and the Italian producers, who "made hay while the sun shone," have been forced into retirement. "Angels" and banks are tired of losing money fostering the ambition of impossible "stars," backing short-range directors, pipe dreamers, "titled" schemers et similia. And, as it often happens, when a worth-while producer, a corking good story and a real director are looking for financial support, they are made to suffer for the sins of others.

Years ago, even before the World's War, Italy conceded the picture premiership to America, and today Italy admits her inability to successfully compete with America in the production of pictures, but feels sure that she can assist in making American films better. Except for a handful of so-called film men who never were and others who are dead and do not know it, Italians are ready to welcome an "invasion" of American producers; a consummation devoutly to be wished. The alert, far-seeing American producer will not hesitate to extend his activities to Italy. Now is the time.

Germany Changes Rules on Film Importation

An American at a German banquet is at a distinct disadvantage, for his auditors are literal to the last degree and quite resentful of humorous evasion. The men of the Ufa, having bought the Metro-Goldwyn product for Germany, were eager for some sign of reciprocity.

Mr. Goldwyn assured the Germans that he was delighted with the great progress made by the German film industry. He explained that selling was much more in his line than buying. He has sold more than one Goldwyn Company, he said, and he might sell another in the near future. To all this the Germans listened in what, to a superficial observer, must have seemed pained silence.

Only when Goldwyn ventured to offer them some advice as to the best way to get into the American market did the Teutonic after-dinner speakers come to life again. Goldwyn's advice to make films of an international appeal was not well received. There ensued something like a controversy around the festive board and the dreadful question of costume plays was warmly discussed.

After the festivities, Mr. Goldwyn looked over the big sets and the zoological garden of the Ufa out on the bleak and barren lands of Newbabelsberg and again wished his German friends good luck. The next day he departed for Budapest.

Rental Wiser Than Sales

bigger followings than the German stars command. This situation will become even more marked when they do away with the restrictive law which now prohibits the importation of more pictures than are produced in Germany.

"The entire European industry is literally becoming Americanized. Their producers are following, as close as possible, with the facilities they can command, the production ideas entertained by Americans. The exploitation of pictures, the ballyhooing, the general publicity would do justice to the smartest men engaged in this field in America.

"Scandinavian film men are setting a pace that their European brothers are finding it hard to follow. In Stockholm they keep right up to the minute on their releases. Harold Lloyd's 'Hot Water played there virtually simultaneously with its release in the United States. It ran in two first run theatres at the same time. Their film houses are really worthy of the name 'palaces,' and their presentations measure up with the best American standards.

"Europeans are especially fond of comedies. They have had their share of tragedy, and now they want to laugh. They also go in strong for the romantic American drama, and spectacles, but they no longer will patronize the trash that for years was thrown on the European market. They shop for their entertainment, just as the theatre-goers do in this country.

"There never has been a time when film conditions in Europe were as promising as they were indicated during our visit, and everything points to a continuance of this favorable situation."

Indiana Fights Second "Blue" Bill; Sunday Measure for Rhode Island

Daylight Saving

The nearing of the daylight saving season provided another matter for discussion by members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. At their meeting this week some one suggested that if the long-day period could not be entirely eliminated, at least it could be curtailed. Every day, every week and every month of longer sunshine in the summer affects the exhibitor bank. This seemed to be the consensus of opinion and the matter closed with the legislative committee being instructed to go into conference on this subject with Chairman O'Reilly.

Warners Building Own Radio Station to Boost Films

Articles of incorporation of the Warner Bros. broadcasting station, with a capitalization of $50,000, have been filed with Secretary of State Frank Jordon, in Sacramento, Cal. The concern is a subsidiary of the Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and simply means that Warner Bros. have realized the value of radio as a means of advertising motion pictures and intend to make use of it.

Jack Warner, who is now in New York, stated that work on the station, which will be located in the Hollywood studio of the company, is well under way and it will open on March 4 with the broadcasting of President Coolidge's inaugural speech.

The station, he said, will be known as KWB, with a 312 meter wave-length. No other studio or concern of any sort for that matter, can hereafter build their own broadcasting station in California because the Warner Bros. license was the last the government will issue in that section, he said. The station will be used entirely by Warner Bros., with the exception of an arrangement made with the Los Angeles Herald, which will broadcast current news at certain periods.

NEW YORK STATE UNITING

Walter Hays, president of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc., and Jules H. Michael, chairman of the Buffalo Zone, of the same organization, visited Syracuse on February 9 to address a meeting of exhibitors in the Salt City. Mr. Hayes outlined the aims and policies of the state body and asked that Syracuse exhibitors get behind the organization with both feet so that a 100 per cent. membership could be attained. He told of the fine work being accomplished in the Buffalo and Albany as well as New York zones. Mr. Michael, who also is a member of the legislative committee of the state organization, discussed legislation now before the solons in Albany affecting the theatre business, and assured exhibitors that with their support there was no doubt but that these measures could be defeated.

Hoosier Legislator Tries to Pacify Fanatical Reformers—Canon Chase Favors Sabbath Whiskers—Ohio Pastor a Liberal

JUST about the time Indiana exhibitors begin to breathe a sigh of relief and start exchanging congratulations over the death in the Legislature of the "movie" censorship bill, along comes another "blue Sunday" measure and up another notch goes the Kissinger "blue Sunday" bill, which has been pending in the House since early in the session. Such is the life of a Hoosier "exhib."

The latest "indigo" bill to make its appearance is one by Senator LeRoy Leonard of Warsaw, to amend the existing Sunday observance law so as to increase some of the penalties of the act. The measure also would require the attorney-general to act in enforcing the law in cases where prosecuting attorneys fail to do so.

The existing law provides for penalties of fines ranging from $1 to $10. The Leonard bill provides that persons convicted for following their usual avocation on Sundays would be subject to a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $25 on first offense and $25 to $100 fines on second or subsequent convictions. In addition, the bill provides that the licenses of offenders who are required to procure licenses would be revoked.

If no license were required for the operation of the business or act by which the law was violated, the business or act could be declared a public nuisance, under the terms of the bill, and maintenance of such would subject the violator to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000. Under this section it might be possible to close some of the "movie" houses and theatres now operating on Sundays.

It was reported in legislative circles that the amendatory measure was offered as a "pacifier" to the more rabid group of reformers by a group not quite so "blue." The more rabid group has been centering all efforts to bring about the passage of the Kissinger bill, which, although bleached somewhat from its original form, is still regarded as extremely severe. Both measures will be opposed by the liberal group.

The Kissinger bill survived efforts to postpone it indefinitely this week and has been advanced to second reading. After accepting the Kissinger bill, the house killed the Smith bill, another "blue" measure, which was designed to prevent Sunday baseball, football or any other sports for which a fee is charged or a reward dependent on the outcome of the contest.

The Kissinger bill came before the house by way of a divided committee report, a minority report signed by Representative Russell Duncan of Indianapolis, favoring indefinite postponement, and a majority report by the other members of the morals committee favoring passage. After a short speech by Representative William H. Kissinger, of Columbia City, author of the bill, the house passed the measure to second reading. The measure is being actively supported by the Lord's Day Alliance.

It is expected that a bill which would legalize the Sunday showing of motion pictures in Rhode Island will soon be introduced in the Legislature. Governor Pothier and other Republicans, who are in control of both houses of the Assembly, are reported to be ready to support such a bill.

Canon William S. Chase, head of the New York Civic League, at the State Capitol recently declared that he was working to prohibit Sunday motion picture shows as well as all barbering on that day. He will devote his entire efforts this winter to securing support for these two bills. Canon Chase denied that he had directly sponsored the so-called "Blue Sunday" bill introduced in the New York State Legislature last week.

A real thrill was given exhibitors at Akron, Ohio, in a sermon delivered by the Rev. Lloyd C. Douglas, of the First Congregational church, when he severely criticized attempts of reformers to bring about enforcement of the Sunday blue laws. The Rev. Douglas said in part: "When the churches have suceeded in driving Sunday amusements, and especially the movies, out of the field, by using the law as a club, the young people who have been in the habit of patronizing such sources of harmless and pleasurable recreation will not be inclined to smile upon the institution that has been instrumental in depriving them of Sunday amusements."

Decision was reached at a meeting in Oklahoma City of the Oklahoma Ministers' Conference and Evangelistic Institute of the Christian church to draft and have introduced in the Oklahoma Legislature a bill to prohibit Sunday picture shows. Should the proposed bill fail of passage, the ministers plan a state-wide referendum.

WISCONSIN LESSONS WELL TAUGHT

Members of the M. P. T. O. in Wisconsin are rapidly learning how to avoid difficulty with exchanges and accordingly are effecting a saving to themselves. This is the statement of Henry Staab, executive secretary of the M. P. T. O., who, to illustrate his statement, points to the fact that of ten cases confronting the Wisconsin arbitration board at its next meeting, only one is a member of the exhibitor organization and his case involves a minor point which is likely to be settled before the session is called.

Cecil B. De Mille and Prod. Dist. Corp. Affiliate in New $10,000,000 Company

New Company Takes Over De Mille Unit, With Stars, and Control of Distributing Organization—Ince Studios in Deal

CECIL B. DE MILLE

CECIL B. De MILLE, insisting upon "absolutely untrammeled competition" in production, has affiliated himself with Producers Distributing Corporation.

De Mille, essentially a creator of motion pictures, asserts he is happy to form this alliance, and further asserts the organization that will release his pictures, together with pictures which he will supervise, but WILL NOT ACQUIRE THEATRES.

The affiliation, rumored several weeks ago, and commented upon by the editor of Moving Picture World editorially at that time, is considered a timely move in the direction of aiding the independent motion picture theatre owner.

A formal statement promulgated on February 6, explains the details of the formation of a ten million dollar corporation, the affiliation of a long list of leading players, authors, directors, and prominent scenario writers, and elaborate production plans that will encourage independent producers of merit and develop new screen talent.

The new corporation, with papers filed in Delaware, will be known as The Cinema Corporation of America, with a capitalization of $10,000,000. This company will acquire the De Mille producing organization with the Thos. H. Ince studio at Culver City, to be known hereafter as the De Mille Studio, and will take over the property and interests of the Producers Distributing Corporation with its twenty-seven branches and foreign connections.

Pledges Independence

In announcing his affiliation with the Producers Distributing Corporation, Mr. De Mille, who announced his resignation a month ago as director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, said:

"Because I feel that absolutely untrammelled competition is necessary for the greatest future of motion pictures, I have gone into this new alliance pledged to keep the film field wide open—pledged to give full and complete support to all independent thinkers whose efforts are not receiving proper presentation to the public under present conditions.

"In merging my production activities with a young, live, going company, I feel that I have entered a greater field of service to the public than any in which I have so far operated. Our plans contemplate making this organization a truly competitive factor, able to stand parallel, financially and artistically, and in every other way, with the biggest in the industry, and make definite advance towards the goal of better pictures."

Stars and Supporting Players

Mr. De Mille will start out in the new corporation with an excellent background of individual stellar attractions, foremost of which will be Leatrice Joy, Rod La Rocque and Florence Vidor. Miss Vidor has starred successfully for some time. Miss Joy and Mr. La Rocque are the latest De Mille players to graduate to stardom. Miss Joy, in her initial starring pictures, "Changing Husbands" and "The Dressmaker from Paris," has more than redeemed the promise shown by her in such Cecil B. De Mille successes as "Manslaughter," "Triumph," "Saturday Night" and "The Ten Commandments."

Rod La Rocque, in "The Ten Commandments," established himself as a consummate artist and he has enlarged his hold on the public since that picture with splendid performances in "Feet of Clay," "The Golden Bed," "The Code of the Sea" and "Forbidden Paradise."

The productions of the De Mille Studio will have the immediate services of a group of supporting artists, including Vera Reynolds, Lillian Rich, Julia Faye, Clive Brook, Barbara Bedford and Robert Edeson, together with such eminent writers and directors as Jeanie MacPherson, author of "The Ten Commandments"; Beulah Marie Dix and Bertram Millhauser, Bradley King, scenarist of "Anna Christie"; Olga Printzlau, Frank Urson and Paul Iribe, directors, and others of importance whose deals are approaching the point of signature.

Developing New Stars

Mr. De Mille announces that he will organize at once a stock company similar to the famous "Lasky Stock," which he organized ten years ago and from which he developed such stars as Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan, the late Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Agnes Ayres, Leatrice Joy and Rod La Rocque. This company will supply players for both the Cecil De Mille and Christie-Hollywood Studios, providing special opportunites for the development of young players.

Producing headquarters of the new corporation will be at Culver City, Cal. In addition to two or three pictures to be personally directed by Mr. De Mille each year, he will supervise between ten and twenty others. In addition to the De Mille productions, the company will continue to distribute the productions of Hunt Stromberg, whose stars are Priscilla Dean and Harry Carey, Al and Charles Christie, producers of "Charley's Aunt," with Syd Chaplin, and other farce features, and the Belasco production "Friendly Enemies," starring Weber and Fields, now being completed in Hollywood.

Independent Releases

Commenting on the future program, Mr. De Mille said: "We will shortly announce a number of productions from big independent players and producers who have been atracted by our plans but whose names cannot yet be announced. The soundness of the policy to encourage film independence has already been, and will continue to be, a magnet for those really big screen people who desire a more adequate outlet for new, interesting and startling ideas."

Strong Financial Backing

The officers of the Producers Distributing Corporation: F. C. Munroe, president; Raymond Pawley, vice-president and treasurer; Paul C. Mooney and John C. Flinn, vice-presidents, will continue in charge of the company augmented by Mr. De Mille and his associates, and the increased interest in the company's affairs by a strong financial group of which Jeremiah Milbank, of New York, is prominent.

"A Free Field"

In announcing his affiliation with the Producers Distributing Corporation, Cecil B. DeMille said:

The Motion Picture Capital Corporation, the finance corporation which is already financing the output of twenty or more independent producers for a half dozen different releasing organizations, has made contracts with the Cinema Corporation of America under which it will co-operate in the financing of a several million dollar program of pictures during the coming five years.

The Motion Picture Capital Corporation was organized in 1923 by Frank R. Wilson, now its president, who has associated in the enterprise a strong group of downtown capitalists.

Wide Open Competition

In behalf of Producers Distributing Corporation the following statement was made by F. C. Munroe, president:

"Since the present Producers Distributing Corporation was organized a year ago it has been our aim to gather to ourselves some outstanding figure of the industry who would attract capital and secure support for our desire to maintain for the theatre-owners of the world a healthy and normal condition of wide-open competition. Cecil De Mille exceeded our fondest hopes. He was not only willing to accept our original program but to carry it much further, to become an equal partner with us in building this idea and ideal into a thing which would benefit not only the commercial side of the industry, but more important, the artistic side—the side which will make more valuable and uplifting to the adults and children of America the stories they see flashed on 20,000 screens."

Constructive Production Policy

That the new alliance will bring into being a number of strongly constructive production policies was stated by John C. Flinn, vice-president of Producers Distributing Corporation, who said:

"Cecil De Mille was the last one we needed to lead the way in the vitally important struggle for a continuation of independent thought on the screen. With him we will be able to build for the future as well as adequately supply the present. No one exceeds, in ability to pick and encourage talent, the man who developed as stars Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan, the late Wallace Reid, Agnes Ayres, Bebe Daniels, Jack Holt, Leatrice Joy and Rod La Rocque. His genius in that direction will have a special outlet through the medium of the stock company which will contract players for use by either the Cecil De Mille studios or the Hollywood-Christie studios. This stock company will be similar to the famous Lasky stock company which Cecil De Mille organized over ten years ago and which has been the source of more outstanding stars than have been developed through any other single channel. Through this two-studio stock company, we will be able to keep a fine group of real artists continuously busy exclusively in the productions we release."

Mr. DeMille and his entourage returned to Los Angeles, hazarding the superstitions of "Friday, the Thirteenth," when they entrained.

Before leaving New York, Mr. DeMille, in a chat with a representative of Moving Picture World, at the Ambassador, said he plans to have his first productions ready for release August 1.

"Two years hence," Mr. DeMille said, "it would have been impossible for me to effect an alliance of this character. It would then have been too late."

Standing in his room, in the Ambassador, DeMille described the gradual closing of the doors against "independents" by holding out his hand and slowly closing his fist.

"It was coming to this," he said. "But we are in this situation for the purpose of trying to show the independent theatre owner that we are with him, and that he can get good pictures (the best we can make), without having to submit to any of the alleged forms of injustice which anyone may seek to impose."

Speaking of production, he said:

"Whether you plan forty, or eighty pictures a year, all must pass through ONE MAN. One brain must consider them all. If you do this year after year, the quality and tone of the pictures must suffer. We shall cut down. We believe it is possible for one man to properly pass judgment on, say, twenty pictures, or thereabouts."

On the topic of product, Mr. DeMille said he has acquired the screen rights to four stage plays, three of the current Metropolitan season, and one of last year's plays that no one had succeeded in landing. Four novels, current successes, have been acquired, and the scenario and reading department in his organization is considering a number of stories.

"The market must be kept open," DeMille said. "You can't throttle an art. It must have its proper and natural expression. We shall make big pictures, and programme pictures."

Mr. Munroe, head of Producers Distributing Corporation, who dropped in on Mr. DeMille at the moment, said:

"We have no desire to go into the exhibition of pictures. We shall produce, but we will not exhibit pictures. Please make that very clear. We have been in business just a little more than a year, and we had many plans, some very big ones, for the future, but we scarcely hoped to be able to have Mr. DeMille with us. Now his association with us is an assured fact. Everyone in our organization is supremely happy."

Mr. DeMille's proposed European trip was called off. Soon after his return to the West Coast, work will be begun on "the DeMille pictures."

PINEVILLE, KY., THEATRE FIRE

The Gaines Theatre at Pineville, Ky., was destroyed by fire on the evening of February 3, the blaze starting in the projection room at 8:30 o'clock in the evening, at a time when a crowd of people, estimated at all the way from 300 to 600, was in the house. Fred Frank, projectionist, suffered painful burns about the hands in trying to put out a blazing film, and an assistant in the booth also suffered slight burns.

F. P. L. DECLARES DIVIDEND

At a meeting held recently the board of directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2 per share on the common stock, payable April 1, 1925, to stockholders of record at the close of business on March 16, 1925. The books will not close.

Showdown Is Expected February 16 on Milwaukee Group Buying Issue

Speculation Rife as to How Exchanges Will React—Membership Being Kept Secret—Wiesner to Handle All Booking

A SHOWDOWN on the co-operative buying issue is looked for in Wisconsin, shortly, when the newly formed Badger Theatres Corporation, a state-wide booking organization, begins functioning on February 16 from its Milwaukee headquarters. Just how exchanges will react to the corporation is the cause of considerable speculation.

Final details of organization were worked out by the corporation at a mass meeting of members at the Maryland Hotel in Milwaukee on February 5. Between forty and fifty exhibitors, many of them from points outside Milwaukee, attended and heard the aims of the new organization explained by those heading the venture.

membership role would be made public after the meeting, the officials decided to keep this matter secret, taking the stand that their organization is similar to a private business enterprise and therefore names of those connected with it should not be of interest to outsiders.

However, observers at the hotel noted that showmen from Rhinelander, Marshfield, Racine, Beloit, Janesville, New London, Beaver Dam, Fond du Lac and other points in the state, besides those from Milwaukee, were conspicuous in the lobby during the day and it is therefore assumed that those places represent strongholds of the corporation.

Because the idea of a Badger Theatre Corporation originated with J. H. Silliman, Fred Seegert, George Fischer, E. W. Van Norman and other leaders of the M. P. T. O. in Wisconsin, it is generally reported that the new enterprise obtains most of its support from cities where the theatre owners' organization is strongest.

As far as can be learned, the corporation still lacks representation among the large downtown Milwaukee houses. Whether it can fulfill its aim without such membership is the cause for considerable speculation, but those on the inside insist that the large downtown houses are unnecessary.

Great secrecy surrounds the activities of the corporation leaders, the stand being taken that they represent a private enterprise which may be harmed by improper publicity. The announcement following the meeting of February 5 was merely to the effect that final details had been completed and four directors had been added to the seven originally named. These directors, with Max Wiesner, general manager, will direct the affairs of the booking combine.

Wiesner was introduced to all of the members and went into detail regarding the aims of the new enterprise. It is understood that it was pointed out to members again that a belief that the corporation will mean an immediate sharp reduction in the price of films is unsound.

Rather, it was explained, the co-operative buying of films through the central office at Eleventh and Wells streets in Milwaukee, would, among other things, result in a saving of time for the average exhibitor and eliminate the necessity of dealing individually with numerous salesmen.

It is planned, it is said, to have Wiesner do all the buying according to requests made upon him by members. Thus, for example, if a certain exhibitor desires three First National pictures and two Warner Brothers, he will make known his desire to Wiesner and the general manager will carry on all the necessary negotiations. The general manager will naturally be in an advantageous position in his deals inasmuch as he is the representative of approximately fifty houses.

It is reported, however, that a certain amount of opposition may be expected from the larger exchanges because of the fear that the organization may become so powerful as to dictate prices. However, thus far none of them have announced a definite stand.

The manager of one of the largest film distributing offices in Wisconsin sounded the sentiments of his fellow exchange men when, in response to a query as to his attitude, he declared:

"So far we are still carrying on business with individual exhibitors. We have not been officially approached by the Badger Theatre Corporation and until that is done we will not recognize that it even exists. After February 16, if an attempt is made at collective buying, the situation may be different. At present all we can do is wait and see what develops."

Of the eleven directors in the organization, five are holders of the major offices and include: J. H. Silliman, president; George Fischer, first vice-president; E. Rice, second vice-president; E. W. Van Norman, secretary, and Fred Seegert, treasurer. The other two original directors are Charles Trampe of the Rainbow and Climax theatres, Milwaukee, and Ernie Langemack of the Colonial, Milwaukee.

The four directors chosen at the mass meeting are: John Adler, Marshfield; E. Prinzen, Fond du Lac; Jack Hickey, New London, and F. E. Wolcott, Racine.

New Detroit Theatre

A conference between Sam Katz, of Balaban and Katz, Chicago theatre operators, and John H. Kunsky and George W. Trendle of the Detroit firm resulted in the announcement of the site of the new theatre to be erected in Detroit by the Balaban & Katz and Kunsky interests. The site, heretofore looked upon as uninviting because of the nature of the surrounding buildings, is to cover a complete block bounded by Grand River, Clifford and Bagley avenues.

Work on the demolition of buildings, which will include several of Detroit's oldest landmarks, will commence in the spring and from that time on the theatre will be rushed to completion. It will be known as the Chicago and will be patterned after the Chicago Theatre operated by Balaban & Katz. Its cost will be about $5,000,000 and it will be 13 stories high, with most of the upper flights devoted to office spaces.

ENTERTAIN JACK WARNER

In honor of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Warner, who are in New York from the Coast for the first time in two years, H. M. and Albert Warner gave a dinner Saturday night in the Crystal Room of the Ritz-Carlton. There were present besides the Warner boys, Motley H. Flint and his brother, Senator Flint, of California; Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Morris, Louis Boehm, Joseph Jessel, Louise Glaum, Lillian Hunter, Jules Brulator, Hope Hampton, Dorothy Mackaill, Kenneth Harlan, Herman Starr and Mr. and Mrs. Percy Waters of Philadelphia.

OPENS WESTERN SALES OFFICES

Fish-Schurman Corporation of 45 West 45th Street, New York City, announces the opening of Western sales offices at 6331 Santa Monica Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal. The firm will carry in stock substantial quantities of Goerz film raw stock negative, positive and panchromatic.

State Rights Sales

C. C. Burr, managing director of East Coast Films, Inc., announced this week that "The Speed Spook," featuring Johnny Hines, has been sold to Western Film Company, 2413 Third Avenue, Seattle, for the territories of Washington, Montana and Idaho. According to arrangements effected Western Film Company will shortly launch an advertising campaign of large proportions to properly exploit this first of the Johnny Hines series.

Sering D. Wilson & Co., Inc., producers and national releasers of "Color Shots," "Ebenezer Ebony Comedies," "Karlo Koler Komics," "Red Head Comedies," and "The Wonder Book," all in natural colors, announce that Harry Danto, president of Theatre Picture Exchange, has taken over the exclusive distribution of "COLOR SHOTS" and "RED-HEAD COMEDIES" for the territories of New York and northern New Jersey. These short reels, one reelers, are in natural color and have been one of the season's best bets on the short reel market.

NEW HACKENSACK THEATRE

Hugh Otis, manager and owner of the Lyric Theatre ,Hackensack, N. J., was granted a license and permit to erect a 2,500-seat theatre at 191-3-5 Main Street, Hackensack. When completed it will be among the largest and most modern theatres in the northern part of the State.

Three New Milwaukee Houses Announced; to Cost $400,000

THREE new theatre projects, whose total cost will approximate $400,000, have been announced in Greater Milwaukee, lending strength to predictions that 1925 will be a record breaker in the matter of showhouse construction in Wisconsin.

Thus far, although the new year is only a few months old, no less than seven buildings have been announced for Milwaukee alone. In addition, talk of a million dollar theatre to be erected by Pantages has been revived with the announcement that a new site is being considered in addition to the Butterfly Theatre location, which was reported several months ago as likely to be used for the purpose.

Samuel Ludwig, owner of the Columbia and Elite Theatres, is behind two of the three new projects. One is a $100,000 picture house at Thirty-fifth and Center streets, a rapidly growing section of the city. The auditorium, according to the John Topzant Co., architects, will seat 1,200. The building will be two stories high and will house stores and apartments as well as the theatre.

Ludwig's second theatre will be constructed on a downtown corner in Wauwatosa, suburb of Milwaukee. The exact location and plans have not been divulged, but it is expected that in construction it will be similar to the Center street house.

The third venture is a $200,000 showhouse to be built by M. Brumm on Villard avenue, North Milwaukee. Br. Brumm at present conducts the Palace, also a North Milwaukee house. The building will be two stories high, 90 by 120 feet, and will also have stores and offices. The auditorium will seat 1200. The house will be known as the Princess and exemplifying its name will be two mural paintings in the lobby. A $15,000 organ will be one of the features.

Speculation regarding the possibility of Pantages entering the Milwaukee field arises again from the announcement that a site on East Water and Wisconsin streets is among those being considered. Heretofore only the Butterfly site has been mentioned.

The $500,000 show palace announced some time ago for Twenty-seventh and Wells streets by the Mal Investment Company, has begun to take definite form with the wrecking of buildings on that spot to make room for an L-shaped structure, 100 by 150 and 86 by 86.

Well Drilled Employes Avoid Fire Panic in Boston

When Jack Williams, projectionist at the Olympia Theatre in South Boston, Mass., saw wisps of smoke drifting across the shaft of light from the machine, he didn't wait to ask what he should do. He notified the ushers, George Scobey and Edward Cummings, and continued showing a picture. The ushers guarded all the exits. Michael Lydon, owner of the Olympia, also was notified and he immediately ordered the musicians, Miss Ardell Dunn, pianist, and Harry Henry, Jr., drummer, to play lively music.

Going on the stage, Mr. Lydon flashed on the house lights and informed the audience of approximately 450 persons that there was "a little fire next door." Then he told his patrons to file out quietly. Miss Margaret Dinneen, the ticket seller, refunded money to many of the patrons as they left the house. The Olympia's special officer, William Ahern, aided women and children from the theatre. The fire, which was in the basement of an adjoining store, did not damage Mr. Lydon's theatre.

Coming and Going

Joseph M. Schenck and Arthur W. Kelly, second vice-president of United Artists, have returned from an extensive European trip.

H. M. Herbel, sales manager of Century Film Corporation, has returned from a sales trip through Western Pennsylvania.

Barbara La Marr sailed last Saturday for a trip to London and Paris.

E. Bruce Johnson, manager of the First National foreign department, sailed last Saturday on the Berengaria for the Continent where he will spend several months for the purpose of opening new First National exchanges in Belgium, Holland, France, Czecho-Slovakia and Italy.

C. M. Hurd, prominent exhibitor of Grand Rapids, Mich., spent most of last week at First National headquarters, returning home with a contract in his pocket for all First National releases to be shown in his Majestic-Garden Theatre.

Ludwig G. B. Erb, who has been superintending production for Associated Arts Corporation at Hollywood, is back in New York where he is attending to important business matters.

Frank J. Matre, vice-president of Associated Arts Corporation, is in New York to attend the annual meeting of the board of directors of that corporation. Matre is president of the Pittsburgh Fire Insurance Company and vice-president of the Marquette Fire Insurance Company of Chicago.

Edmund Goulding has returned to Manhattan from an extensive European tour.

Mr. and Mrs. Rowland V. Lee of Hollywood have returned to New York after a three months' honeymoon abroad.

J. Charles Davis 2nd of the Davis Distributing Division, Inc., is touring key cities on a sales trip.

F. B. O. Host at Studio Party; Policewoman Explains Picture

F. B. O.'S first production to be made in the East, temporarily titled "Lilies of the Street," is being "shot" by Director Joseph Levering and Belban Productions at the Whitman Bennett studios, Yonkers, N. Y., with Johnnie Walker, Virginia Lee Corbin and Irma Harrison in leading roles. The event was made the occasion for a Bowery party on the afternoon of February 6. Newspaper, fan magazine and trade paper writers made the trip from New York City in automobiles. Samuel Briskin and George H. Davis, of Belban Productions, made the transportation arrangements.

At the studio the guests were greeted by Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and managing director of F. B. O., Nat Rothstein, director of publicity and advertising, and Mrs. Mary E. Hamilton, New York policewoman, whose story forms the basis of the picture. There was much dancing and scenes were shot, the guests acting as atmosphere. Mrs. Hamilton described the importance of her work toward prevention of crime among children. She has obtained a two months' leave of absence from the police department in order to supervise the production, and she is lending her co-operation in plans to have police chiefs everywhere aid in exploiting the picture.

A buffet luncheon completed the party, which was easily one of the most successful studio affairs ever staged by a motion picture company. Among those present were: David Poucher, treasurer of F. B. O.; Paula Gould, in charge of publicity; Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Goebel, of Goebel & Erb; Mrs. Ross, Mrs. Nat Rothstein, Willis M. Powell, Alma Talley, Rose Pelswick, Ethel Rosemon, Irene Thirer, Lawrence Reid, Regina Cannon, Susan Brady, Clarence Osborne, Larry Moen, Arthur W. Eddy, Harold Flavin, John S. Spargo, W. Adolph Roberts, George Gerhardt, Fred MacIsaac, Elizabeth Kern, J. S. Dickerson, Lawrence Urbach, Clarence Shottenfels and Gus Fausel.

DAVIS TAKING LARGER OFFICES

The Davis Distributing Division, Inc., which J. Charles Davis 2nd organized a short time ago, has been forced to take space double the size of their present offices at 723 Seventh avenue, New York.

No Labor Troubles Hindered "Ben Hur," Declares Niblo

STATING that he was misquoted on his return on February 4 from Rome, Fred Niblo, director-general in charge of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Ben Hur," on leaving New York for California emphatically denied that there had been any difficulty with the Fascisti government of Italy or any other political party, or that there had been labor troubles of any sort.

"The Italian government gave us every co-operation," Mr. Niblo said. "Even the King of Italy granted us the use of his Villa Boboli in Florence for certain scenes in 'Ben Hur.' That doesn't look as though there were any trouble in that direction, does it?

"As a matter of fact, the statement attributed to me is quite the opposite of the true situation and is an injustice to the government officials who gave us co-operation in every way and to the thousands of Italian artisans and extras who put their heart and soul into the picture."

Mr. Niblo will "shoot" final scenes immediately upon his arrival at the West Coast, he said. In the company which returned from Rome and will appear in the final scenes to be filmed at the studios were Ramon Novarro, May McAvoy, Carmel Myers, Kathleen Key and Claire McDowell.

Executives of the Metro-Goldwyn company, including Nicholas M. Schenck, vice-president and general manager of Loew's, Inc., Edward Bowes and J. Robert Rubin, reviewed more than 12,000 feet of "rushes" of the giant spectacle and delcared that they surpass anything heretofore seen in motion pictures.

Mr. Schenck also was emphatic in denying that the "Ben Hur" company returned from Rome for any other reason than that the mammoth production is about completed. He said:

"All of the big scenes in 'Ben Hur,' the important sequences, have been completed in accordance with the schedule laid out before the company ever went to Italy. We announced several months ago that 'Ben Hur' would be completed shortly after the first of the new year, and that the company would return about this time. It is unfair to the Italians who co-operated splendidly with Mr. Niblo's organization to have any other interpretation placed upon the company's return now."

COURT TAX EASTMAN THEATRE

The Court of Appeals of the State of New York in a unanimous opinion has upheld the decision of a lower court declaring the procedure brought to compel the City of Rochester to tax the Eastman Theatre and School of Music is defective. By this decision the action brought by Julius Hoesterey, Jr., through James L. Brewer, as attorney, comes to a close. The case started in July, 1923, and was in the nature of a certiori proceeding designed to have the courts review the action of the board of assessors in exempting the big Rochester house and school properties from assessment and municipal taxation on the ground that they were educational institutions.

JAMES DONALDSON DIES

James Donaldson, for a number of years in the motion picture industry, died as the result of double pneumonia in a New York hospital on January 26. Mr. Donaldson for three years was circulation manager of Motion Picture News. He later became attached to the staff of Moving Picture World, leaving this publication to become associated with the Conde Nast organization.. He was buried from his home in Mt. Vernon, N. Y., the interment being made in Kensico Cemetery.

UNIQUE NEBRASKA RULING

"The court decides that cities have no right to run competitive picture shows." Judge Bayard H. Paine of Grand Island, Neb., while sitting specially at Hastings, Neb., entered a permanent injunction, restraining the City of Hastings, its council and officials from conducting a competitive moving picture show in the City Auditorium, at the instance of the Hostettler Amusement Company, plaintiff.

St. Joseph Exhibitors Establish a City Association

A new chapter was added to the M. P. T. O. Kansas and Missouri last week when, at a meeting at the Robidoux hotel, St. Joseph, Mo., St. Joseph exhibitors were organized into a city association which will be affiliated with the M. P. T. O. K. and M. The meeting was sponsored by President R. R. Biechele of the Kansas-Missouri; James Watson, vice-president, and C. E. Cook, business manager.

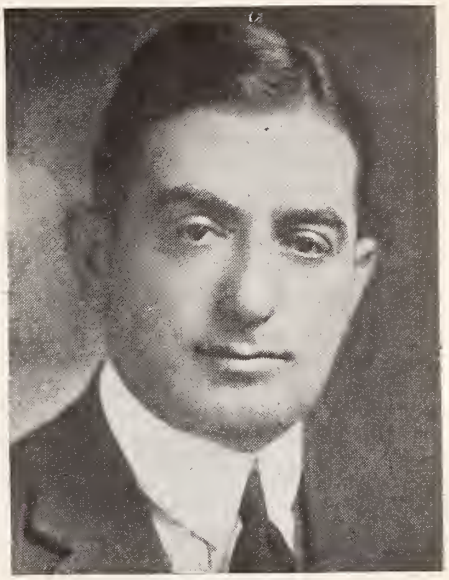
St. Joseph long has been the largest city in the state without a city organization. An election of officers will be held in a few days. The new city association plans to meet every two weeks and actively participate in all Missouri and Kansas affairs. St. Joseph has a population of about 100,000. The charter members of the association are:

N. W. Williams, Electric Theatre; Barney Dubinsky, Tootle Theatre; E. H. Reinke, Colonial and Orpheum Theatres; Mrs. F. Wurtenburger, Empress Theatre; M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre; John Egli, Hickory Theatre; G. E. Montrey, Park Theatre; Roy Spurlock, Star and Nickle Theatres; W. Lench, Jr., Savoy; Edward Peabody, Penn and Palace Theatres.

New National Council to Combat Censorship

The National Council for the Protection of Literature and the Arts, which will combat all forms of censorship, has been organized in New York City, with temporary headquarters at 30 East Forty-second street. It is intended to co-ordinate the interests of authors, artists, screen writers, magazine, book and newspaper publishers, motion picture producers and labor unions.

Douglas H. Cooke, president of the Leslie-Judge Company, heads the temporary organization committee. This also consists of Courtland Smith, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.; Peter J. Brady, president of the Federation Bank of New York; Guy L. Harrington, treasurer of the MacFadden Publications, Inc., and William M. Clayton, president of the Publishers' Fiscal Corporation. William A. De Ford is counsel.



JOHN ZANFT

Vice-president and general manager of the William Fox Circuit of Theatres, has just been appointed by Governor Alfred E. Smith as a member of the Board of Trustees and Managers of the New York State Reformatory at Elmira, N. Y., it was announced from the executive's offices this week.

Mr. Zanft succeeds Lieutenant Governor Seymour Lowman, who was first appointed to the board in 1918 and who is resigning in order to assume the duties of his new office.

Garsson Writes Hays in the Interest of Independents

Following the public release of copies of a letter purported to have been sent by him to Will Hays, Murray W. Garsson, head of Garsson Enterprises, is credited with making the announcement that in the future he will call a meeting of independent producers, distributors and exhibitors to consider asking the Government to investigate alleged monopoly in the motion picture business.

Moving Picture World was informed by his secretary that Garsson has been in court all of this week but that he is determined to call such a session of the independents. The date and meeting place have not yet been decided, the secretary said, adding that as regards his letter Garsson has received a reply from the Hays office to the effect that Mr. Hays is now on the Coast and that the message will be brought to his attention.

Charging that Hays "utterly ignored my request for an expression from you as to what has been done or what will be done by you or your organization to put an end to the unfair methods of the Big Three and their subsidiaries, whose tactics today are throttling independent production of meritorious films," Garsson's letter to Hays also declares:

"In spite of the fact that you are so noncommital as to your attitude on this most vital problem, it would seem that the independent exhibitors themselves are thoroughly alive to it, as evidenced by the fact that during the last ten days I have received upward of two hundred letters from exhibitors throughout the country, agreeing with me that an immediate and radical remedy is imperatively necessary to again open the gates of fair competition."

13 New Theatres for Paramount

Famous Players-Lasky, it just becomes known, has invested approximately $13,500,000 in thirteen theatres, some of which are under construction and others of which are now being planned.

With the exception of one theatre, that in Atlanta, now being built in association with the Keith interests, the policy of the new houses will be on a strictly picture basis.

Among the other Paramount sites in respect to this project are: the Putnam building, Broadway, Manhattan; Jacksonville, Miami, Tampa, St. Petersburg, Fla.; Jackson, Tenn.; Greenville, S. C. Houston, Texas; Lincoln, Neb.; Denver, Woonsocket, R. I.

Conn. May Repeal Tax; Nebraska Fears One; N. C. Feels Safe

A bill has been introduced in the Connecticut Legislature for the repeal of the 5 per cent. state tax on admissions to theatres and other places of amusement. Other bills affecting theatres, which have been introduced, are the following: Providing motion picture film storage licenses expire July 1, to cost $25 and $10 for renewal; providing use of standard size safety motion picture film; placing billboards under jurisdiction of building inspector or first selectman.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature of Nebraska by Senator McGowan of Norfolk, asking that a tax of 2 cents be added to each theatre ticket and that no advertisements may be shown on the screen. The bill also provides that theatres be prohibited from selling tickets after the seats are filled to capacity.

"This Legislature is afraid of a sales tax," declared one leading member of the North Carolina General Assembly, "and I don't believe there is a chance for any such measure getting a serious consideration at this session."

He went on to explain that the public would not stand for a sales tax, just a year after many of the obnoxious nuisance taxes had been lifted by the government.

So while such a measure will undoubtedly be introduced, theatre owners do not believe it will travel very far, and that they are safe for another two years at least against an admission tax similar to the 10 per cent. tax in force in South Carolina.

BULLOCK AND WOOD RENAMED

At a recent meeting of the M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio, held at Columbus, Sam Bullock of Cleveland was reappointed field representative of the organization and P. J. Wood was again named paid secretary. The funds required for the ensuing year will be underwritten by a group of exhibitors over and above the amounts received from cash dues, slides, etc. The executive session at which the appointments were made is the first to be called under the presidency of William James.

Film Board of Trade Issues "Don'ts" for Showmen

The Albany, N. Y., Film Board of Trade has just sent out the following list of "don'ts" to exhibitors throughout the territory served:

"Don't fail to report to the exchange any film received in poor condition. It will prevent some other exhibitor from receiving the same sort of service. Do this before your show by wire—not after running same.

"Don't hesitate to call the attention of the exchange to any way in which your service can be improved. We want to give you good service.

"Don't hold over film without the consent of the exchange. You may cause some other exhibitor to miss out as well as to cause yourself considerable expense.

"Don't fail to report any film received with parts removed. The members of the Albany Film Board of Trade desire to give their exhibitors complete subjects.

"Don't let a representative of any company promise you anything that is not a part of the written contract. If he can promise it, he can put it in the contract. Protect yourself. Your contract is the only thing that will hold in court or with the arbitration board.

"Don't fail to have a separate contract for every run in every theatre provided you have more than one house. You will very often save yourself trouble by so doing.

"Don't fail to study the terms of the uniform exhibition contract. Ignorance of its terms is no excuse for violation."

Few Incorporations in New York State Last Week

The past week brought a slump in the number of companies incorporating and entering the motion picture business in New York State, the records showing that but five such companies were chartered, this being the lowest record in several months. The companies incorporated included the R. B. B. Amusement Corporation, capitalized at $30,000, with H. Rosenfeld, B. Brodie and I. Resnick, of New York City; Carona Slide and Picture Corporation, $20,000, M. F. Lluberas, P. A. Kelle, New York City; R. A. Kelle, New Rochelle.

The capitalization of the following companies was not specified: Francan Co., Inc., Adolph Schimel, R. Lipnick, New York City; H. W. Berg, Brooklyn; S. Cole, Inc., with Maude Barte, G. Barte and B. Kramer, New York City; Mark Strand Theatre Corporation, Buffalo, Moe Mark, E. B. Mark, New York; M. Sharaf, Boston.

CHRISTIE OPENS NEW YORK OFFICE

The Christie Film Company has opened its New York office at 2 West 45th Street, at the corner of Fifth Avenue. The new office of the Christie Company will be the distribution headquarters, with Carroll S. Trowbridge as general representative.

Charles H. Christie, vice president and general manager of the company, is making his headquarters there for a few weeks but will return to the studio in Hollywood during this month, where a large program of Al Christie features is under way.

Exploit Testimonial Dinner Just Like Big Premiere

The dinner to B. F. Woodhull, former president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, N. J., on National Inauguration Day, is being exploited like the world premiere of a big motion picture. An immense web banner strung across Broad street at Market will compel the attention of Newark for three weeks prior to the event. Several hundred motor trucks are moving about Newark streets, the countryside and other municipalities, directing attention to the ball given in honor of Mayor Frederick C. Breidenbach of Newark at the Robert Treat immediately following the Woodhull dinner.

One hundred foot trailers for picture theatres throughout the state also direct attention to the ball. The Newark newspapers will carry display ads and readers; theatres will use de luxe trailers; theatres of all types will contain advertising for the ball; thousands of windows will display half window cards while the billboards will be called upon to capacity to herald the dual event of March 4.

Seats for the banquet, limited to 200, have been over-subscribed many times. The committee in charge has explained that this is to be a 100 per cent. theatre owner banquet, which distinguishes it from the public ball, open to 2,500. The Essex County Theatre Owners' group has subscribed for 600 tickets to the ball.

Wisconsin, Manitoba Legislate Against "Kid" Actors

A drive against the employment of minors in tab shows resulted recently in the fining of one Milwaukee theatre man, one manager of a troupe and three mothers of children who were allowed to appear on the stage. Walter Schoen of the Liberty Theatre is the exhibitor fined. He paid $10. The manager of the tab show is Edward J. Heibler. Other arrests will follow, it has been intimated.

A new act passed by the Manitoba Legislature prohibits the employment of children 18 years of age and under in any capacity by theatres and also stops the appearance of juvenile performers of 10 years of age and under at any theatre in the Province. Exception is made under the act for special cases when apermit will be issued by the Provincial Government for the employment of a juvenile, but such permit requires an annual fee or tax of $25 under the regulations.

The new act hits the picture theatres of Winnipeg, where a specialty had been made for many years of juvenile performers at children's matinees on Saturdays and other special occasions, the performers being local talent.

CHASE JOINS COMMONWEALTH

Maurice A. Chase, widely known in the business end of the motion picture industry and in the past holder of a number of responsible executive posts in big corporations' sales departments, has joined Commonwealth Film Corporation in New York.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Revival Week Is Again to the Front With Big Business and Low Rentals

TEN or eleven years ago this department urged a Revival Week idea, and a lot of managers made considerable money with the stunt. It has been used more or less regularly ever since, and always to good results.

Now comes Joe B. Hurl, of the Opera House, Milford, Mass., to report that he made a clean-up, and it's about time to pass the word along, for the spring, and particularly the Lenten season, is a good time to work the idea, though any time business sags is as good as any for this stunt.

Mr. Hurl writes that he used the idea last season and it worked so well that he took a repeat the week opening January 5.

Well in advance he ran a slide asking patrons to write and tell him what pictures they most desired to see again. From the rather lengthy list he picked those most in demand, though he did not always adhere to the top bookings.

He advises us that he opened to the biggest Monday in ten weeks, and with a rental bill of less than half the usual sum.

Cuts Prices

That's one valuable consideration, though it is no economy to save money on rentals and lose much more in receipts. The big idea is to pick pictures that will still bring in more than average money, though the rentals are low because the pictures have passed their first-run prices by perhaps a year or two. It's not the price that counts. It's the fact that you can drag in more people with a past success than you can with an average picture at a larger rental. The price is a side issue, but it's a mighty attractive side issue, at that.

The White Sister is the most recent of the offerings, though Back Home and Broke is not exactly old. It's the best thing Meighan has done in his starring career.

Some Veterans

Male and Female is several years old, but it still brings in real money to the window, and played with Easy Street for the comedy it made a really attractive offering. The Third Alarm was teamed with Meighan for a double bill and another double was The Old Homestead and Where the North Begins. The Three Musketeers has lost none of its charm, and if you can remember Go and Get It you'll recall that this should make a wonderful Saturday offering.

And with a revival week you do not have to worry about bookings. The only trouble is to drag some of them off the shelves. You don't have to wait a week or two for Male and Female. They are glad to give it an airing, and yet it is a better picture than some of the more recent DeMille productions. You can take your pick of the old programs with small danger of conflicting bookings, and you can be certain of getting what you order.

But don't try to run a film that is not in good physical condition.

Easy to Work

It's simply worked, but you need to work well in advance to get the best results. Advertise in your program and on your screen that you are going to bring back some of the old favorites. Ask your patrons to make their own selections. Mark the ten or fifteen getting the most mention and book them from this list, not necessarily those at the very top of the list, but those you can get to the best advantage and which you can be sure are more than the title and about half the film.

After you have made the bookings, start in to sell the idea. Tell what good pictures they were. Tell that they still are good. Hammer away and sell your patrons the idea that they want to see all of them. Make a special price on a season ticket good for every night. You should sell a lot. Make a daily change of bill. Don't run any picture for two days.

Work, Everywhere

The stunt has been worked in all parts of the country from the Rialto and Rivoli in New York to the smallest towns, and we have never heard of a failure, while unusual successes are many.

And the funny part is that the revival will bring out business for many weeks following. It really is a revival in that it makes for interest in pictures in general, particularly among those who have drifted out of the habit of regular attendance.

Hart's New Cards

J. M. Edgar Hart, of the Opera House, Augusta, Maine, has hit upon a capital idea. Working a Raffles for K, the Unknown, Mr. Hart advertised the stunt in all of the store windows.

For this purpose, he used a card only four and one-half inches deep, and he writes that he got into many windows where a tall card would not be admitted. The idea is that the lower card can be placed anywhere without obscuring the showing of the store merchandise, and for this reason the merchant is more willing to give it room.

With an eighteen-inch width Mr. Hart was able to put over the stunt fully, and he got more than double the usual number of windows. He worked with the Kennebec Journal and got about two columns of free publicity at the cost of a $5 gold piece. It put the picture over to abundant business.

Keep the Hart low-cut card in mind when you want to get a 100 per cent. window showing.

A GALLERY OF OLD TIME HITS THAT MADE BIG MONEY

Joe B. Hurl made a drive on his annual event with this half page splash and he made a pot of money while his rental bills were cut to less than half. Some old timers here, but you have patrons who would like repeats. Ask them.

Animates Stunt With Phonograph

Setting up a lobby display on The Fast Worker, C. F. Cresline, of the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., based it on an electrical phonograph, but he did not use it for reproducing.

Instead he set it inside a chimney-like structure faced with brick paper; red paper broken with lines of white to suggest a brick wall.

On top of this he placed an automobile shoe, on the circumference of which two small automobiles raced, without ever catching up. This was where the phonograph came in, for the cars were attached to the disc (the horn being thrown off), by fine wires. The structure stood about six feet high, so the motive power could not be seen, and the racing cars formed a good attraction since it looked as though the cars were running under their own power and people wanted to see what made them go.

The stunt cost about $3 and gave a 50 per cent. increase in business.

Waugh Had Stunts for His Peter Pan

Howard Waugh, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, used all of the regular stunts on Petre Pan and then wrote a few of his own, the best of which was arranging to give publicity in the society columns to kiddie box parties. This got him about twenty parties on the week, one of which had sixty guests. He also got out a prize cross word puzzle for one of the papers, the only advertising being the name of the dog nurse in Peter.

Arranging for a Peter Pan Kiss to be sold by a local confectioner, he pasted another bird on the beak by enclosing his samples in a glassine envelope printed up "A kiss from Pola Negri" and advertising her in The Forbidden Paradise, while there was also a panel for the forthcoming attraction. Some four hundred stores handled and advertised this kiss.

He also got out rules and blotters of his own design.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

OPERA in miniature, programmed as "Gems From Carmen," was the salient feature of the show which had, "If I Marry Again" as the principal photoplay. In point of detail and quality, this was one of the best things ever put on here, as more than ordinary pains were taken in choosing the singers, the settings and in rehearsals. Besides this, there were four other musical incidents, the Mark Strand Topical Review, and the feature picture. The whole show ran two hours and five minutes, of which time, "If I Marry Again," took up one hour and twenty-three minutes. With the Topical Review running six minutes, there was a period of thirty-six minutes together for the musical numbers.

The overture was the Finale from the Fourth Symphony by Tschaikowsky, requiring six minutes. This was lighted as follows: Borders and foots of the orchestra stage in blue; silver draw curtains closed across the production stage and flooded from the dome by steel blue Mestrums of 160 amperes; 2 orange floods on the musicians from the booth. These floods changed to white at the finish of the overture. Immediately following, an encore number was played, "Brooklyn Mark Strand March," composed and especially orchestrated by M. L. Lake and dedicated to Moe Mark. The white floods which had come up on the orchestra at the end of the overture were held for this march, which took four minutes. Preceding it was a short trailer in the form of an announcement concerning the march. All other lighting remained the same.

Irving Berlin's song "All Alone" was used as a duet by a mezzo soprano and a tenor. A deep blue plush cyclorama served as the background and at either side was a telephone desk and chair upon which was the telephone. Soprano was seated at one table and tenor at the other. At the opening a light spot from over-head picked out the soprano only, leaving the rest of the stage dark. Soprano sang one verse and chorus, and her spotlight faded out as another dimmed upon the tenor. He sang one verse and chorus and then both singers arose and came center stage for another chorus as a duet. the soprano singing the obligato. The only other lighting was a soft blue flood on the musicians. Four minutes for this number.

After the Mark Strand Topical Review, which ran 6 minutes, came Estelle Carey, lyric soprano, who sang on the apron of the large stage. Her number was "In the Garden of Tomorrow." (Deppen). There was a lemon spotlight on the singer from the booth, and a moonlight blue Mestrum flood on the orchestra from the dome. Light blue silk curtains were drawn across the production stage. Borders and foots of the large stage in purple. Four minutes for this number.

The "Gems From Carmen" were staged in an elaborate garden, which had a transparency back-drop, in front of which was a set wall five feet high. An iron grilled gated was in the center and properties included benches, set trees, set shrubs, grass mats, blooming flowers, etc. The back-drop was lighted from the rear by white open box lamps and was also lighted from the front by a combination of box and flood lamps of lemon and amber. For the front drop draw curtains painted to represent a huge Spanish shawl was used. All the numbers done, named as follows, were in correct operatic costume. While the announcement film was being run on the screen, the orchestra played the overture to "Carmen". At the opening the ballet corps was seen in the dance programmed as "Ballet Music." Following this, the "Letter Duet" was sung by Louis Dornay, tenor, formerly of the Covent Gardens, London, and Jean Bennett, soprano, formerly of the Royal Opera, Budapest. Next came the well-known "Habanera" by Ruth Watzon, soprano, formerly of the San Carlo Opera Company. Premiere Danseuse and the Ballet Corp came on again for the "Gypsy Dance" and then the incident closed with the famous "Toreador Song," sung by Carlo Ferretti, baritone, formerly of the Royal Opera, Milan. Appropriate "business" was used to carry the sequence. Eighteen minutes for this number.

TWO ANGLES ON THE EXPLOITATION OF THE TEN COMMANDMENTS AT BARCELONA, SPAIN

The Coliseum Theatre decorated the house front with Egyptian tapestry paintings and did street exploitation with an ingeniously planned perambulator showing an Egyptian archer in a chariot. Nice Appreciation Helps This Program

D. M. Bain, who used to send in a weekly hint on hook-up pages when he was with the Wells houses in Wilmington, N. C., has moved over to Henderson, N. C., where he is holding down a desk in the Capitol Theatre. He writes he is going to shoot some stuff presently.

Meanwhile he sends in a program of the sister house in Raleigh, for which he wrote the appreciation on the first anniversary. Perhaps the copy will help you on your next birthday. Here it is:

One year ago we entered the theatrical field in Raleigh with a deep sense of the responsibility we thereupon incurred; a responsibility to the fathers, the mothers, the children; a responsibility to the educational and religious institutions of Raleigh; a responsibility to those sterling civic organizations who are daily evolving the process of creating the new and greater Raleigh; a responsibility to every citizen of this city.

We realize that it is not customary to think of the theatre as an institution with a responsibility, but history shows that amusements without responsibility have passed, after brief popularity, into the discard. This theatre endures—and has prospered—because its directors realize and accept a definite responsibility to the citizens of Raleigh.

Public service is usually considered a thankless undertaking, but we of the Capitol, from manager down to janitor, do not find it so. On the contrary, the reaction of Raleigh to our efforts to present clean, consistently high class entertainment at a low cost to patrons, has been a source of extreme gratification to us. We find great happiness in the many expressions of pleasure and good-will we have received here. We approached the task a year ago with a serene confidence that it would be thus, and we believe our patrons will be glad to learn that the financial success of our venture has been very satisfactory.

We believe it is needless to mention the fact that we are today spending double the amount we did a year ago for our programs; the patronage of the Raleigh theatre-going public has encouraged us to do this, and we have even more ambitious plans in view for the coming year. We started here a year ago without advance promises beyond this: "YOUR MONEY'S WORTH OR YOUR MONEY BACK." By word and patronage Raleigh has told us that we have made good. And without any eulogistic or flowery language, we wish to say to you, in all sincerety from the bottom of our hearts—

WE THANK YOU!

East and West

Just to show that the stunt is good on either ocean, Universal reports that the adaptation of the Raffles idea to K the Unknown, as suggested in the press book has cleaned up for the Columbia Theatre, Seattle, and the Capitol Theatre, New Bedford, Mass.

The latter house got seven days' front page publicity for an investment of $50, and both houses cashed an unusually good business. The stunt is about thirty year's old, but it is still strong and willing where it is worked right.

Masked Dancer Is an Aid to Sandra

Although no prize was offered for identification, a masked dancer appearing in the prologue to Sandra at the Palace Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, was one of the best selling stunts on that First National.

The girl really was an exceptional dancer, and as it was announced that she was a local society girl, everyone wondered who it might be. No one made a successful guess, however, and she retained her incognito until the end of the run when she gave her past performance unmasked before the largest crowd of the week.

It's just another example of the pull of the local attraction. The dancer would not have gained half the attention had it not been announced that she was a resident of San Antonio, and this fact was played up in the newspaper work for all it was worth.

Credits Payne

Sending in an anniversary program for the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., Frank H. Burns, publicity director, writes: "The idea for this magazine and some of the copy was taken from a similar anniversary issue for the Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, Ky. Mr. Payne made such a nice issue that I decided to follow his lead."

Burns got out a very attractive issue, offering "North of 36," the anniversary attraction, as evidence of bigger and better pictures, and the entire issue sold not only the anniversary program, but the general idea of going to the Beacham regularly.

Plugging Peter

Included in the accessories on Peter Pan at the Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, were 45,000 rotos, 8,000 buttons and 20,000 whistles, not to mention 4,000 one sheets and 129 24-sheet stands, and 8,000 postcards. There were seventeen big window displays, most of them carrying merchant advertising, as well, and one store held a reception, giving out the whistles to possible wearers of Peter Pan clothes.

Advertising Matches Reach Picture Field

For a couple of months after the Democratic National Convention New York still was flooded with card matches bearing the legend, "Smith for President." Millions of cards had been imprinted in the confident belief that they would last until November.

The card match has invaded almost every field. Churches give them out, municipal drives horn in and hotels put them out apart from those given over their own counters, but Leon J. Bamberger, Claud Saunders' first assistant, seems to be the first to introduce them as picture exploitation.

A jacket has been prepared, leaving half of the front vacant for a two-line imprint for the local house, as shown in the cut. These will be supplied, ready printed, in lots of 2,500 books and up, the minimum price being reached on lots of 10,000, which cost $35. From there the price runs up to $11 for 2,500.

This does not represent the cost of the match, for Paramount pays its share in consideration of the advertising it receives. As in the case of tobacco and proprietary articles, the cost to the user is cut through the contribution of the owners of the advertised product.

It is suggested that the cost may be reduced to little or nothing through resale to cigar stores, restaurants and other places, and at the prices quoted we believe that the theatre manager can compete with the prices charged dealers for books with other imprints. We are not certain, but we think that dealers pay from 20 to 30 cents for a box of 50 books. Slightly cutting this price will make the final cost to the theatre very small in proportion to the advertisement received.

The matches are manufactured by the Lion Match Company and are standard product.

One Good: One Poor

Howard Price Kingsmore had several hookups on His Hour when it was played at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta. One good one was the announcement of a local phonograph store that it stocked on its records the Russian music used as accompaniment to the picture at the Howard.

Not so good was a tie to a grape drink with the urge that you would enjoy it "like the guests enjoy it in His Hour." It's enough to drive Elinor back to England to imagine her hectic personages indulging in wild orgies of grape-flavored soda water. From a more practical point of view we do not believe that the suggestion helped the picture any.

Inferno Stunts

"Hell before your eyes" was the rather vivid marquise banner used by the Joie Theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., on Fox's Inferno. Backing this H. P. Read did his lobby over with red lights and he cut the title out of the six sheet and backed this with red paper and electric lights. He more than got the cost of his trouble back on the extra business he pulled in.

Pictorial Window was East to Land

Waves and a galleon against a blue cloth backing, some sand and cutout palm trees gave Guy V. Kenimer an unusually good window on The Sea Hawk at the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville. He got another window, in a jewelry store, for the display of a ship miniature and a music store showed the plugger song with a ship on a sea of green cloth. All three windows had a stronger appeal than usual, yet the cost was small.

An unusual stunt was getting in on a dance of the yacht club. This was to be the star event of the club season and the ballroom had been decorated to represent a shore resort. Kenimer convinced the committee that a boardwalk should carry some billboards and contributed a pair of six sheets. In the newspaper write up of the decorations these sheets were given ample mention.

A truck with cutouts and the regulation campaign put the attraction over to the business it deserved and still left the extra money mostly net profit.

Local Production An Aid to Merton

Copying an old Goldwyn stunt, Claud Saunders made the studio questionnaire the big stunt for Merton of the Movies, and it was very generally used, although nearly always there is a back kick when the serious minded applicants find that nothing comes of all the trouble.

On the surface it looks great, but in the long run it is bad medicine for the house, though it may make money for the picture.

Oscar Kantner, Paramounteer, hoisted the curse when Merton was played at the American Theatre, Oakland, Cal. He used all of the applicants in a locally produced picture, which was made in front of the theatre.

He blocked traffic while the picture was being made, and they all came to see the screened results. It made for S. R. O., for the local stunt was bigger than the best imported film feature.

Sold Peter Pans From Lobby Booth

Here is a stunt worked by the Capitol Theatre, Altoona, on Peter Pan but which can be used with good results on any book sale, though not to the point reached by the Capitol, since this book sale was held the week before Christmas and the books were delivered wrapped in holly paper, ready for the tree or the stocking.

THE LOBBY BOOTH

This was done the week before Christmas, when gift suggestions were good salesmen, and not only were a stack of the books sold, but hundreds more were sold on the idea of seeing the picture when it came along.

As a general thing the local stores will resent your book sales, so the better plan will be to let them supply the books and salesman and take the profits. You can well afford to supply the booth for the sake of the advertising, and the book booth will mean a great deal more than a window display, though probably you will get that, too.

Showed Peter Pan for 6,342 Line Ad

Realizing that the holiday season is a time of good will, John J. Friedl, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, and Raymond B. Jones, his publicity man, worked a good will stunt on Peter Pan, which was played holiday week.

Jones hooked the Herald to an offer to show Peter to all institutional children in Dallas. With two portable machines, a showing was given in every juvenile institution in town, and a reporter went along to write a sob story. The net result was 6,342 lines of front page stuff and a tremendous impression on the pay patrons.

They added to this a potato matinee, the spuds being turned over to a charity organization, and they also showed to the Chamber of Commerce.

A purely local product was the location of a photographer who had a number of negatives of Mary Brian, made while she was a resident of Dallas. Prints were made of these for his show case with a brag about "our Dallas star" and gave a local touch to the general publicity.

Ten foot cutout letters spelled out the title on the marquise, with a cutout perched on the first E in "Peter," while the week before an admirable scene was used in the foyer.

Open Handed

Varying the usual clown ballyhoo for He Who Gets Slapped, the Rialto Theatre, Aurora, Ill., used a clown with a large dummy hand on which the advertisement for the show was painted. Naturally the device got more attention than the usual back-banner. You can make the hand of compoboard, or you can stuff out this foundation into the semblance of a glove. The latter is more effective, but the first idea is, of course, much easier.

Teased Them

Taking advantage of natural curiosity, Ed. R. Moore, of the Orpheum Theatre, Allentown, Pa., enclosed his heralds on The Sea Hawk in transparent envelopes which revealed the red ink line: "He's a stealer of women."

People who would pass the naked herald with a glance opened it up to see who the lady stealer was and, having opened, they read the herald through. Try it some time, using just one prominent line and folding so that line will show.

Twenty Window Hook Got a Town Excited

Very similar to the essay contest in which the words to be used were to be found in store windows as a totalizer contest staged by George Eshenfelder, Paramounteer, for Guy Kenimer at the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville.

Of course a newspaper was hooked in to the idea, and it gave a lot of publicity for several days in advance.

The idea was very simple. About twenty stores had been hooked to Peter Pan goods of various sorts. They took special advertising, and that helped land the newspaper.

At half past eight, precisely, the opening night of Peter Pan, each merchant put into his window a card with a number on it. All you had to do to win a wrist watch was to enter the numbers in all the windows on a form provided by the newspaper or to be had for the asking at the theatre, then you added the figures and rushed up to the box office with the total. If no one had arrived ahead of you you get the watch. If you came later there were minor prizes, each co-operator offering one prize.

It was a sort of combination of foot race, mental test and strategy demonstration, the strategy coming from the skill used in mapping out the route so as to make it the shortest distance to the box office.

That is where the stores profited. Each window was visited in advance of the stunt, a knowledge of the window contents being useful in discovering the numbers.

Clowned for He

The clowns worked the streets of Fairmount, W. Va., for "He Who Gets Slapped," with good results for the Princess Theatre. They trundled hoops along the street, the hoops carrying circular cards for the attraction. At each corner they would stop and pull a stunt, winding up by slapping each other and then bursting into a hearty laugh.

This was backed by a strong general campaign with special attention to window displays and newspaper work. For several days a slug with the title was run on every page of the daily paper, driving home the title.

Here's a Good One for an Essay Idea

Fred Walton, of the American Theatre, Bellingham, Wash., more or less aided by Harry Eagles, Paramounteer, has put a new kick into the old essay stunt.

Two weeks before the showing of Peter Pan, the local paper announced cash and ticket prizes for the first essays on Peter of one hundred words each.

Nothing new about that, but the 100 words were distributed in card form to twenty store keepers, each getting five of the words. You had to look all over the twenty store windows, write down the words and then assemble them into the essay, which is why Walton said "first" instead of "best."

Talk about your cross word puzzles! They were forgotten for a week while Bellingham did a word juggling stunt.

It's easy to land the windows on this stunt. It's easy to land the paper, and it's easy to sell seats. Walton will tell you about that part of it.

Changing Pace

If your local editor gives you the glassy eye when you bustle in with the suggestion that he use another limerick, follow Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, and change to a tongue twister.

Bill has left a train of twister all over his territory where he has been promoting Peter Pan. The prize winner in Findlay, Ohio, was:

"Powerful prognosticating play-producing potentiates persistently proclaim Paramount's photoplay, Peter Pan, positively pleases particular people, proclaiming presuming public's popular preference."

Would you do all that for a pass to the American? A lot of people did, and Bill sold the idea wherever he went, positively proving publicity promotion produces profit.

Loaned a List

One of the advantages of standing in with the papers was shown in Toledo, Ohio, recently when the Temple Theatre wanted to circularize children on Baby Peggy in Family Secrets. A paper had just closed a children's contest and it loaned the list of contestants to the house, providing a list that was 100 per cent. correct.

A bank offered a pair of tickets to any child starting an account with the savings department, and a bakery was hooked to a display of miniature loaves, to match in proportion the tiny star.

Flashed the Spots

One of the highlights in a campaign on The Galloping Fish and The Girl in the Limousine at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., was a one sheet spotted by two lights. These flashed on and off at intervals and gave motion value to an otherwise still display, getting much more than double the effect.

This was only one of the good ideas put to work to put over this pair of First Nationals. Generally First National splits the week with something else, but Manager Wallace figured that these two could be shown in one period to a profit, and he found he was correct.

Holdover Ad is Weak in Appeal

There is a lack of conviction to the second week Sunday ad for Captain Blood at the Sun Theatre, Omaha. There is an absence of the whoop that a holdover of any sort should elicit. "Second smashing week" down at the bottom, does not carry the suggestion of enthusiasm, and there is nothing else anywhere in the ad to suggest the holdover, unless you can regard the "Ask those who have seen it" as a reference to its retention.

LACKING IN JAZZ

"Ask those who have seen it" as a reference to its retention. The copy is as cold as yesterday's coffee. There is no apparent enthusiasm on the part of the writer, and so there is no enthusiasm to be communicated to the reader. Take the line just quoted. Change it to "Ask anyone of the thousands who already have seen it." Don't you think that would coax your money easier if you were the man in the street? Take the companion line. Change it to "This opened last Sunday. Monday it was the talk of the town." A second week advertisement should fairly ooze exuberance. There should be exultation in every line. There should be invisible exclamation marks all over the page. There should be lines such as: "One big week was not enough. We are holding it over to accommodate those who were turned away last week." "Don't worry because you missed it last week. We'll try to make room for you this week—but come early." This sort of copy leaves the reader cold. It is an announcement rather than an advertisement.

Small Letters Spoil a Line

The best sales line in this cross page thirteens from the Luna Theatre, Logansport, Ind., is lost because it is hidden under the signature. If we had that space at our disposal and a line as good as that "If you want to know what love means" we would have streamed it across the space in 36 point letters even though we had to throw away some of the cut matter. There is nothing else in the space that will appeal to the lovers of the Glyn type of stuff with one tenth the force of that line, and yet it is hidden under the signature and masked in with a line of twelve point so close below it that the 24 point gets very little show. A half inch of space between that line and the signature and a quarter inch between that and the follow line, with another half inch between that pair and the next would have been the proper display, particularly if the line had been raised to a 36 point. We believe that the general flash sold about all the tickets the Luna had to dispose of, so the matter is purely the academic one of display, but display will help some time when a play needs more help than His Hour probably required. The compositor seems to have made an effort to gain good display and by and large he has done well enough, though he could have gained the same or even greater display value had he used smaller type faces with a little more white space between. The space is too full to carry the strongest appeal and the same lines, set out by white, would have looked more important and in some cases would have appeared to be larger. It's good work for a country office, but then the country compositor sometimes does better work that the city man, who discards the type cases for the linotype and the casting machines.

trimmings, but the general public does not know that plan book stuff is being used, and if the work is of top grade it probably would not care. The day is long since gone when the house artist was necessary to good advertising because the plan books fell far short of the house requirements. Now you can get material for advertising of any desired size, and better material than is generally to be had from local men, few of whom are especially trained for amusement advertising. This cut is largely an attractor, but since it sells Gloria Swanson and Gloria Swanson sells tickets, it performs its office well. We like these displays from the Loew houses in Washington. They are moderate in size, but so well planned that they sell as thoroughly as though two or three times the space were taken, and if you can sell completely in a small space, it is idiotic to buy more lineage since it is all waste. This is 90 lines, by three, a total of less than twenty column inches.

A GOOD DISPLAY THAT WOULD BE BETTER WITH MORE WHITE

This space from the Ben Ali Theatre, Lexington, Ky., and gives point to the warning that ad writers should study their effects. This shows a cut in the segment of a circle, apparently a cut down from a larger cut to fit the space taken. This is all right and often it happens that a cut can be cropped to decided advantage. This cropping retains all of the desirable portions of the cut where space, for the sake of space, is not desired, and had the upper and right hand edges been shoved up against the side rules this would have made a very presentable space. The same would have held true did the top of the cut rest against a solid signature cut. As it stands it suggests a makeshift and does not give the same value. Probably people who read the advertisement will not be concious of this lack, but the mental impression made by this display is not as favorable as it would have been had the cut been more nicely framed. Probably it did not affect business, but assuredly it did not help any. Left without border, this suggests a makeshift. Set against a solid it would suggest a cut especially made. Shoving it to the top would have pushed out the signature, but this could have been taken to the bottom of the space with equally good effect. The story is nicely sold on plan book copy, and we like the isolation of the allusion to the source of the story. This will gain the interest of the many readers of the Ladies' Home Journal.

Good Drawing is a Decided Asset

Vitagraph often produces line work for its advertising accessories that is above the average, but even Vitagraph does not often attain a standard found in this display of Between Friends used in Sunday display of the Sun Theatre, Omaha. Possibly this is re-drawn from a somewhat similar drawing in the press book, but whether it is locally done or lifted from the book, it is as nice an example of good line work as you could require. Tellegen's eye is overdrawn, but for the rest the expressions are good, and close masses of black have been produced that simply cannot go wrong even with poor press work. Note how the shadow is handled around the three faces, giving strong outlines and then shading off before it can hurt the heavier hair masses, and then note the strength of position of that sales talk within the wedding ring. You might also note the effect of the shading back of lettering of the title, which gives a strength seldom found in a straight reverse. Until you come to below that title this is very nearly an ideal advertisement. Then the artist queers it all by lettering in what could have been done much better in straight type. It is almost impossible to read that left hand box without eye strain, in spite of the fact that a letter equivalent to a ten point has been employed. It would have been very much better in a straight eight point, leaded. The right hand box is better, but in a four tens four well known players each get a line only 1⅜ inches long and less than 3 3/16 of an inch high. This is a clear waste of opportunity. Except for the lower two inches this is a really handsome advertisement, but the lower fifth spoils the whole.

Started Well

Here's another from George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

When he has a good one coming he asks each employee to tell five of his friends to tell five of their friends to tell five of their friends that there's a good picture in the offing.

Maybe there are some skips and dead ones in the fourth generation on, but it gets off to a good start, and costs nothing.

George started it for Peter Pan, and it helped on that one.

Reduced Full Page Has Full Page Value

Recently we have seen few uses of the old stunt of going shy one column of a full page and still getting full page value, but the Lyceum Theatre, Minneapolis, worked it on He Who Gets Slapped to let in a decidedly attractive layout which is backed by some excellent sales talk. This space is six columns wide by 19½ inches deep. It cuts the cost of 35 inches of space and yet it gets just as much attention as a full page space would command. Probably it got more, for the average reader will pause at the page to see what the text is about where he might pass over a page wholly advertising. There is a nice proportioning between cut space, title and text, and the display is all that can be desired. It is seldom that we get as good an all round advertisement, and it should have had a marked effect upon the business. This is selling the picture about one hundred per cent. As a rule even a big picture can get through on a quarter page, but in this instance the use of the larger space backs up the opening line to the effect that this is the year's big picture. That line would lose some of its effect in a smaller space, though it still would be the truth.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

THE SHORTENED FULL PAGE

Courtesy Contest Landed Doubter

The manager of the Sunshine Theatre, Alberquerque, N. M., was reported to have said that he would boot from his sanctum the first exploiteer who sought to sell him exploitation.

Al Birch, of the Paramount Denver office, regarded this as a dare, so he went down and sold the house on a Valentino Courtesy Contest. It was the same idea that was worked years ago for The Ten Dollar Raise. Just a prize to the person voted the most courteous one in town. The local jeweler contributed a gold watch for the prize in return for the advertising he got from the cooperating newspaper, and the paper ran the contest for nine days before Valentino was due in A Sainted Devil.

It not only brought the house business, but the local merchants too extra newspaper space unasked to brag about the courtesy shown in their stores.

"Charley's Aunt"

Screen Version of Famous Stage Farce with Syd Chaplin Is Riot of Laughs and Box-Office Winner

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Brandon Thomas' famous old stage farce, "Charley's Aunt," which has provided huge enjoyment for more than one generation of theatregoers, has at last reached the screen and is being distributed through Producers Distributing Corporation, and in its film form produced by Christie in connection with Ideal Films, Ltd., it is destined to continue to spread enjoyment to many, many more.

The plot can be outlined in a few words. Two of Charley's college chums arrange a luncheon at which a wealthy aunt from Brazil is to be the chaperone. She fails to arrive; Charley is persuaded to pose as the aunt. Of course the real aunt arrives, and so does Charley's sweetheart, but all comes out satisfactorily in the end. A simple story, it is treated as pure farce comedy, with the one idea of getting laughs, and, Oh, Boy! it does.

Probably this idea sounds familiar, for in various forms it has been a prolific source of comedy material, but in the directorial hands of Scott Sidney and with Syd Chaplin in the title role, assisted by a competent cast and the thoroughly amusing situations that have stood the test of time as laugh-getters, it can stand up in competition with more modern plots and not fear the result, for we don't recall any picture that will afford an hour more filled with real honest-to-goodness laughs. At the big new Colony Theatre on Broadway, New York, it kept a packed house in an uproar throughout and received generous applause after it was over.

What if some of the situations have been clowned and things happen that never would in real life. They get the laughs; that's the point. And make no mistake about it, Sydney Chaplin is certainly a crackerjack comedian. From the minute the story gets into its stride until the very end he keeps you thoroughly amused. He not only has a lot of new gags but he puts over the more or less familiar ones in a style all his own that makes them register with redoubled force. He is always bringing in unexpected bits of business that are good for another laugh, and he acts as if he thoroughly enjoyed his work. We don't know how much of the material was due to the author, scenarist and director, but we got the impression that a good proportion of it was due to Chaplin himself, so spontaneous does it seem. Anyway, there is credit enough due for all to get their share.

While Syd has the lion's share of the comedy, there are others who contribute laughs. James E. Page as the girl's pompous guardian, Lucien Littlefield as a butler-valet and David James and Jimmie Harrison as Syd's chums; and Joseph Farnham's titles, many of which are comedy gems from the play, contribute their share, with the result that there is almost literally a laugh in every foot.

The entire cast is thoroughly capable; Eulalie Jensen appears as the real aunt; Ethel Shannon as Syd's sweetheart and Priscilla Bonner and Mary Akin as the sweethearts of the boys.

Make no mistake about it, "Charley's Aunt" is a rollicking, good humored, thoroughly amusing farce and we can heartily recommend it to anyone that enjoys real laughter. It looks like excellent box-office tonic.

Length, 7,243 feet.

Story

While on vacation, Babbs falls in love with Ela and schemes to aid her father, who has lost heavily at roulette. Babbs sends him away and later learns the truth, and starts with her chaperon, Donna Lucia, for England. In the meantime, Babbs' friends, Jack and Charley, on hearing that Donna, Charley's aunt, will visit them, invite their girls, Amy and Kitty, for luncheon, hoping to propose to them. Donna does not arrive and Babbs, who appears in the makeup of an old lady which he is to use in a college play, is pressed into service as Charley's aunt. The situation is complicated by the appearance of the girl's guardian, Mr. Spettigue, who opposes their love affairs, and by Jack's father. Both set up to Charley's aunt because of her supposed great wealth. In the midst of exciting situations the real aunt appears but conceals her identity. Finally Babbs gets consent to the girls' marriage by promising to marry Spettigue, and then reveals that he has been masquerading. In the end all is straightened out and Babbs wins Ela, while Sir Frances Chesney married the Donna, who was his former sweetheart.

"Pampered Youth"

David Smith Vividly Realizes Booth Tarkington's Prize Novel, The Magnificent Ambersons, for Vitagraph

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

With no derogation to the actors, the outstanding feature of "Pampered Youth" is the fidelity with which the producer, David Smith, has recreated the atmosphere of a bygone day; several bygone days, in fact, for this story, which was awarded the Pulitzer Prize of its year, has some prodigious time jumps, and with each lapse the director manages to suggest the passage of time in the surroundings as well as in the changing fashions.

The scenarist has been not far behind in transferring the book incidents to the screen and the result is a wonderfully faithful translation to screen action of a story that in its plot interest does not always justify this loving care. The story is not pleasant and a swing for a happy ending does not help much. It is an almost perfect study of the evolution of a third-generation cad, and the general atmosphere is unhealthy. But Mr. Smith swings it to a rousing finish with a finely handled fire sequence. This does much to help the general effect and the producer has done much more for the author than the latter has done for him.

Probably the author's name, the fine production and the progress of the automobile, as shown by several early types, will carry this story along, but the director is entitled to far more credit than the author. The acting average is good, the outstanding feature being the work of Ben Alexander as the spoiled small boy.

Twenty-five or thirty years ago every small town boasted of its Amberson family, whose home was the show place of the village and whose every action was news. Major Amberson's daughter, Isabel, loves Eugene Morgan, but he gets himself in disgrace by a drunken serenade, and he leaves town, while Isabel marries Wilbur Minafer, a poor second choice, who makes a very passable husband. Not loving her husband, Isabel centers all of the love in her heart upon her son, George, who naturally changes from a spoiled small boy to a despicable young cad whose extravagances eventually deplete the Amberson fortune. His father has died and George strongly resents his mother's love for Morgan, who has returned, a prosperous automobile manufacturer, even while he loves Morgan's daughter. The death of the insolvent Major Amberson forces the boy to go to work and brings about his regeneration. This is speeded by the heroic rescue of Isabel by Morgan when the house in which she lodges burns. The final tableau suggests the moral rehabilitation of George.

"The Great Divide"

Metro-Goldwyn Offers Fine Version of Gripping Stage Drama with Alice Terry and Conway Tearle

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As a play, William Vaughan Moody's celebrated American drama, "The Great Divide," enjoyed many seasons of prosperity on the stage and is still a favorite with stock companies. Metro-Goldwyn are now offering an excellent screen version of this story with Alice Terry and Conway Tearle in the leading roles.

The story is gripping drama throughout and concerns a finely reared girl in the great West who, beset by three intoxicated men, agreed to marry one if he saved her from the others. She kept her bargain, and through the influence of his love for her the man re-established his place in society and eventually won her love, but the road was a long and arduous one, for he had to overcome the loathing and disgust of their first meeting.

Reginald Barker has made a production that is excellent from every standpoint, and particularly noteworthy because of the magnificent backgrounds. Much of the action occurs in the Grand Canyon of Arizona and these scenes were filmed in these sublime surroundings.

But the beauty of the backgrounds does not dim the force of the story, which is gripping and entertaining throughout. The story is well constructed and the interest held tensely as the spectator watches the seemingly hopeless fight of the hero to gain the girl's love. Many times it seems that this is near at hand, but she remains still unrelenting until seeing him in actual danger her love is at last awakened. A few of these situations could be shortened. However, as it stands "The Great Divide" should provide highly satisfactory entertainment for the average theatregoer, and we think that the women especially will be interested in the psychology of the heroine's fight and thoroughly appreciate her viewpoint, which is an intensely human one.

In addition to the dramatic value of the story, stirring thrill scenes have been introduced in which the hero on horseback leaps to a swaying bridge over a flooded canyon, and later with a companion rides madly down the canyon to escape the onrushing wall of water. This is unusually well handled and there is fine suspense.

Alice Terry gives a fine portrayal of the heroine. She is an excellent type for the role and brings to it beauty and an ethereal charm that makes her performance doubly effective. Conway Tearle gives one of the best performances of his career as the hero. In a character that excites even your disgust at first he finally makes you want the girl to accept his love, which has the ring of absolute sincerity. Wallace Beery, as always, gives a fine performance in a deeply villainous role, that of a drunkard. The others in the cast render thoroughly capable support. ZaSu Pitts, George Cooper and Stanley Gordon handle subordinate roles with good effect.

The story of "The Great Divide" may not stand the test of probability, judged by the standards of every-day life, but it makes gripping entertainment.

Length, 7,811 feet.

Story

So anxious is Polly Jordan to go on a visit that Ruth persuades her brother, Philip, against his will, to take her. Dr. Newbury promises to stay and protect her but is called away by an accident. Three rough strangers returning from a fiesta see Ruth and break in. In desperation, Ruth picks out Stephen and offers her life to him if he will save her. He does. This sobers him up and, insisting that she stand by her promise, he takes her away and they are married. He takes her to his valuable mine which he has neglected and tries to win her love, but Ruth remains disgusted with him. Her brother trails them, and though Ruth is ashamed and makes it appear all is O. K., he finds out something is wrong and takes her home. Stephen keeps away as long as he can, then goes to her, but she repulses him and falls in a swoon. At the risk of his life Stephen crosses a flooded canyon and gets the doctor and a son is born. Still Ruth refuses to forgive him, even though the others plead for him. Finally she blurts out the truth about their meeting and her brother starts to shoot Stephen. Seeing him in danger awakens Ruth's love and all ends happily.

"The Devil's Cargo"

Wallace Beery Saves, Almost Single Handed, a Paramount Story of the Days of '49

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Made into a picture, Charles E. Whittaker's vivid play, "The Devil's Cargo," uses an admirable cast in a succession of thankless roles, and yet the production is carried to success through the virile work of Wallace Beery, whose personality probably is the chief reason why the stage play went into picture production.

Beery provided the one thoroughly human and interesting figure in spite of the fact that he is the villain and not the hero. The hero, done by William Collier, Jr., is a man in whom few can become interested; a narrow, bigoted type, swayed by sensual passion and rising to manhood only in the last spisode. He gains little interest in spite of the excellent playing of Collier, or perhaps because of the excellence of his work, for the better the delineation of character of this type the less interesting that character becomes. The same applies to Pauline Starke as Faro. The author has given her a role which cannot win sympathy.

On the other hand you are almost sorry when Beery finally is overcome. Almost you wish he had been a little more successful in his brief rule of ruin, for here is the one character in the story who is natural, unforced and real. Not until Beery takes command of the ship does the story become more than an interesting picture of the gold-adventuring days. Not until he assumes the upper hand does the story become vitalized, but from then through two powerful reels he does the work that will spell the success of the play.

The fight is a tremendous thing, and it probably will carry this production to success. Both Collier and George Cooper take some nasty knocks and even Miss Starke and Claire Adams are buffeted about in a fashion new to the screen. It is a riot of brutality that is not revolting only because it is so intense. The production has been carefully made to reproduce old time conditions and the acting average is exceedingly good.

Story

John Joyce, newly arrived in Sacramento to edit a newspaper, arrays himself with the Vigilantes and is one of the most eager in his demand that the mining camp characters be expelled in an effort to make the capital what he thinks it should be. Then he meets Faro" Sampson and falls in love, believing her to be the daughter of a minister. When he discovers she is the daughter of a gambler and chief attraction at his den he spurns her, but meekly returns at her call, and by her is placed in a compromising position. He is evicted along with the people he has denounced, and his sister is carried away on the same boat. Vigilantes refuse to permit the crowd to land, but they force their way ashore until the bursting of the boiler sends the boat adrift with a few men and women still aboard. Ben, a fireman, assumes command by virtue of the fact that he has the captain's cap and superior strength. But when he seeks to make Joyce's sister his victim, Joyce is galvanized to action and a fight results in which Ben is overpowered by a blow from the skylight above his head. Demoted to scullion on the rescue ship, Ben pares potatoes while Joyce and "Faro" find happiness.

"The Trail Rider"

Action and Unusually Well Sustained Suspense in Newest Fox Western Starring Buck Jones

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Recent Buck Jones vehicles have been hitting a high average of entertainment value and "The Trail Rider" his newest for Fox is no exception, and it looks like a picture that will please the majority of "western" fans.

Buck appears as a wandering cowboy who in a strange town meets with unusually exciting experiences revolving around the keeping of diseased cattle from crossing a deadline. It is a well-knit story skilfully handled, the interest of the spectator being focused especially on sustained suspense, literally of the hair-trigger variety for in several of the situations the safety of the hero depends on his quickness and skill with a "gat."

There is, however, no lack of action and good riding and hard fighting of the usual western variety and a pleasing romance together with good human interest has been introduced into the story. There is a particularly despicable villain, a stampede of a herd of cattle which the hero attempts to handle single-handed and a rescue from the hoofs of the onrushing herd, and exciting climax in which the heroine rides to save the hero and is herself wounded.

Altogether it is an exciting western melodrama, well directed and well acted. Buck has a congenial role and introduces some effective comedy touches to offset the intensity of the suspense. Lucy Fox again ppears as his leading woman, with Carl Stockdale as the villain, and Jack McDonald in a heavy character role. George Berrel also shows to advantage as the shoemaker friend of Buck.

If your audiences like westerns we believe "The Trail Rider" will please them.

Length, 4,752 feet.

Story

Tex Hartwell, cowpuncher, arrives in town and gains the friendship of Uncle Boley, the shoemaker, and the enmity of Jim Mackey, a crooked banker, when he goes to Boley's aid in a scrap. Mackey orders his gang to get Tex, but he is too quick. Winch gives Tex a job as trail rider to prevent infected cattle from getting on the ranges. Mackey, in league with owners of the cattle, plans to rush them across the dead-line, using his niece, Fanny, as a decoy to get Tex away. Fanny tries to warn Tex, but it is too late. The cattlemen are sore on Tex and think he has double-crossed them and tell him to retrieve himself by stampeding the cattle across the line. He makes a valiant attempt but fails and is fired in disgrace. Fanny tells Tex that Mackey has abused her and that he is the leader of the cattle runners. Tex forces Mackey to sign a confession exonerating him. Fanny takes it to the cattlemen, but Winch, a dead shot, has already started after Tex. Tex gets the drop on Winch, but not until Mackey has shot at Tex and wounded Fanny. Boley gets Mackey. Fanny recovers and she and Tex decide to ride a trail of their own together.

"Her Husband's Secret"

Frank Lloyd's Newest Production for First National is Sentimental Story of Two Generations.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

For his newest production for First National, Frank Lloyd has taken May Edginton's magazine story "Judgment" which starts out with a loving but misunderstood wife, a philandering husband and a sincere friend of twenty years ago and carried their affairs into the present generation with a love affair between the daughter of one and the son of the other.

Considerable footage is used with the earlier scenes in which the principals appear in the unfamiliar apparel of that period and then there is a jump of many years, with the thread again taken up with the younger persons.

A great deal of sentimentality has been introduced into this picture, and we see the beautiful friendship between the woman and the girl's father, extending through the years. The philandering husband's son is very much like his worthless father. He becomes involved in crooked financial schemes, and coincidence is rather overplayed in his marriage to the daughter of his mother's best friend. The climax is melodramatic and not altogether plausible, where the boy taunted by the girl's father and realizing his unworthiness jumps over a cliff. He recovers, and then there is a jump to a year later when he is shown as having survived the fall, and his father-in-law is proud of him.

The picture suffers from a division of interest due to the introduction and playing up of new characters in the second generation, and the hero is not of the type that excites sympathy even though you realize he is suffering from the heritage of his father. The latter part of the picture does not seem to ring true, the ending is conventional and stilted and there seems all through to be an excess of sentimentality. The appeal is to the heart and it will probably go better with feminine patrons, but the story never gets down deep under the skin.

The entire cast headed by Antonio Moreno, Ruth Clifford, Patsy Ruth Miller, David Torrence and Walter McGrail do good work, and the technical details are good. There is a thrill in the jump of the hero over the cliff. This picture, however, does not begin to measure up to the standard of Frank Lloyd's previous productions, such as "The Sea Hawk," "The Silent Watcher" and many others, and will probably prove a disappointment to this director's admirers.

Length, 6,150 feet.

Story

Tiring of home life, Leon Kent gives a wild party and his wife leaves with their young son and goes to a neighbor's house. Brewster a banker sympathizes with her, Kent becomes enraged and taking the boy leaves home. Twenty-five years later, Brewster and Mrs. Kent, though they have never married, have maintained a beautiful friendship. Brewster's daughter returns home bringing her fiance Elliot Owen. Brewster's knowledge of men enables him to read Owen's character and Owen confesses that he has already married Judy Brewster and demands that Brewster save him from prison and disgrace. He refuses, Owen discloses that he is really Mrs. Kent's son. Brewster tells him the only way is for him to make way with himself by walking over a cliff. Owen refuses, Brewster taunts him with cowardice. Judy discloses the fact she is to become a mother. Owen, suddenly seeing himself in his true light, takes the plunge. Brewster finds him badly injured at the foot of the cliff, but still alive. Sometime later a meeting in Brewster's home is to determine the fact of a dishonest employee. Brewster pleading important business goes to play with the baby. Owen pleads for leniency for the boy and gets him another chance.

"The Cloud Rider"

Thrilling Aeroplane Stunts in F. B. O. Film Starring Al Wilson Make it a Good Attraction

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "The Cloud Rider" F. B. O. is offering the second of a series of Van Pelt Wilson productions starring Al Wilson, the stunt aviator. Al himself wrote the story which provides several chances for thrilling aeroplane stuff, and it should prove a satisfactory attraction for the average audience.

There is a particularly good stunt in the early part of the picture that will make even the most jaded sit up and take notice. A girl goes up alone in a machine that has been tampered with by the villain and a wheel comes off in mid air Al takes another plane and with a heavy wheel, said to weigh fifty pounds, strapped to his back, he transfers from one plane to another and fastens the wheel in place. Later there is another thrill where the heroine accidentally grasps the control wires and the machine plunges to the ground; and still another good scene in the climax when Al drops into the water from a low-flying plane and captures the villain whose machine has been wrecked. In addition there are encounters with the villain's henchmen and a couple of good fights.

The story has been built up with the purpose of providing opportunities for aeroplane stunts and it accomplishes its purpose and more than makes up for a rather obvious and not altogether plausible story. It is filled with action and melodrama and holds the interest at all times. The star is rather undersized and not the type of the usual movie hero, but he is there with the aeroplane stuff all right, and we believe the majority of patrons are going to like this picture. It is a better production than his first "The Air Hawk."

The star has been surrounded by a good cast. Virginia Lee Corbin is attractive as the girl and there is a rather unusual twist to the romance, as in the earlier reels, the hero treats her as a pampered child and is interested in her sister, portrayed by Helen Ferguson. Harry von Meter is effective as the villain. A number of aeroplanes are used in this picture, one of the scenes being that of an air race. Bruce Mitchell has directed the picture satisfactorily so as to play up the aeroplane angle.

Story

Bruce Torrence, a champion aviator, and member of the secret service, has a formidable rival for the hand of Zella Wingate in the person of Juan Lascelles who owns a fleet of aeroplanes which he uses in smuggling drugs Thinking to get rid of Bruce, Lascelles loosens a wheel. Zella goes in the machine but is saved from death by Bruce who makes a thrilling transfer to the plane in midair. Later Bruce finds Zella in Lascelles arms. Zella's little sister Blythe, forbidden to attend a party goes to the beach and finds Lascelles talking to his henchmen. Reporting to Bruce he starts after Lascelles' machine. Blythe hides in the fusilage and accidentally wrecks the machine by monkeying with the control wires. Bruce and Blythe find themselves in the woods and Bruce realizes it is Blythe that he loves. They are captured by Lascelles who starts to take Blythe away in his machine. Bruce escapes with the aid of a former buddy among Lascelles men. Bruce gives chase, Blythe operated the controls and causes the machine to drop into the water. Bruce jumps from his machine, rescues her and captures Lascelles. Bruce and Blythe start out on an aerial honeymoon.

"Chu Chin Chow"

Metro-Goldwyn Offers Screen Version of Colorful Arabian Nights Tale That Was Stage Success

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Our old friends of childhood days, Ali Baba and the forty thieves, furnish the basis for "Chu Chin Chow," an English-made picture produced by Graham-Wilson Productions, Ltd., and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn.

The story is one of the most colorful and romantic of the Arabian Nights tales and the screen version is adapted from the play of the same title which enjoyed a long run as a huge spectacle in the larger cities of this country and England. It concerns a beautiful Arabian girl, stolen by the leader of the thieves on her wedding day, sold to a wealthy miser in Bagdad, and who finally outwits the robber band, killing the leader after she has disposed of the forty thieves she found hidden in jars.

There are quite a few big sets, one of an Arabian village with its quaint domed building, one of the interior of the money lender's palace and a big scene in the market place of the city in which a large mob of extras is employed. The picture, however, does not register strongly as a big spectacle and suffers in this respect by comparison with a number of productions. For instance, there is nothing especially striking or magnificent about the robbers' cave with its wonderful treasure, the effect being produced by the use of baskets and bags of jewels and gold coins, the setting being that of an ordinary large cave.

The only familiar name in the cast is Betty Blythe, who appears in a congenial role as the beautiful slave. She shows to advantage in elaborate and abbreviated oriental costumes. Among the best of the supporting players is Herbert Langley as the leader of the band of forty thieves, who has the majority of the action of the picture, for he appears not only in this role but in the disguise of a prince and a wealthy Chinese merchant, his villainy motivating the entire action. Jameson Thomas as the heroine's lover makes a good impression but is given little to do.

Possibly due to the cutting, there are some big jumps which weaken the continuity and lessen the hold of the story on the spectator. "Chu Chin Chow," despite its colorful theme and the scope of the production, is not outstanding from any angle and we do not feel that it will exert a strong appeal on the average audience.

Story

Abou Hassan and his forty thieves descend on a small Arabian town on the wedding day of Omar and the beautiful Zahrat and kidnap them. Abou sells Zahrat to the wealthy miser and money lender of Bagdad, Kasim Baba, while posing as Prince Constantine. Later, Abou returns as a Chinese prince, Chu-Chin-Chow, and bids in Zahrat at auction. She pierces his disguise and exposes him. He robs the other bidders of their wealth and escapes with Zahrat. Promising that she shall live among untold wealth, he sets her free and when she finds Omar he brings them to his treasure cave, making good his promise. Ali Baba, brother of Kasim, accidentally discovers the cave, helps himself to the treasure and goes for aid to free Zahrat. Kasim, led by his greed, also comes to the cave and is captured and killed by Omar. Zahrat, freed, returns to Bagdad, Ali Baba gives a big feast, Abou appears as a merchant with forty jugs of oil in which his forty thieves are hidden. Zahrat discovers this fact and, assisted by a powerful slave, they get rid of the thieves. Left alone, Abou is denounced and the multitude turns on him. Cornered, he is stabbed by Zahrat, who returns to the village and finds happiness with Omar.

"Coming Through"

Thomas Meighan Fares Better in His Newest Paramount Than in Some Recent Plays.

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Picking a story for Tom Meighan ought to be a simple matter and yet he has not fared so well with some of his stories. In "Coming Through," done from a story by Jack Bethea, he fares better than usual at the hands of his story picker, for the plot offers plenty of action, reasonable suspense and love interest. The chief trouble is that the early scenes show him as a cad who apparently marries the girl because her father is also his employer and can advance his interests.

An effort is made to prove that he merely marries for love, but it does not run very convincingly. Once past this point you can become interested in Tom Blackford's efforts to make good in a coal mining camp to which he has been sent by his father-in-law in the hope that he will fail, and the end of the story works up to some tremendous scenes in which, for once, Wallace Beery is not permitted to "hog the show." He gives fine support, but he is not permitted to dominate the scenes.

The action ends with a splendid fight and chase over a coal tipple which gives vastly more punch than the usual fist fight, and the scenarist wisely cuts down to the meat of the falling action, ending the story before the effect of the fight becomes lost. Lila Lee is the very charming young wife, and many in the minor support stand out well in their small roles. It is a good action ensemble, and the placement of most of the development in an actual coal mining town gives the interest of legitimate local color. The action is not laid in a coal town to make it interesting, but it is interesting because of the locale. It is a decided advance over some of the recent Meighan vehicles.

The Story

Tom Blackford is counting upon a promised promotion to enable him to marry Alice, the daughter of John Rand, his employer. The appointment goes to Rand's nephew, but Tom marries Alice anyhow, to the distress of her father, who cunningly turns against him his incautious remark that the road to advancement seems to lie through relationship. He offers Tom a position as superintendent of one of the company's mines and then writes Joe Lawler, who expected to be given the appointment, that the company will make him superintendent if Blackford quits, adding the intimation that he does not care what means are taken to induce this action. Alice goes with her husband, though she declares that she does not love him, and they set up a platonic honeymoon. Lawler, working with Shackelford, the keeper of the local speakeasy, stirs up trouble, finally calling a strike. Tom abolishes the dive when a drunken engineer nearly kills some of the mine workers, and turns the tables against Lawler when he shows that the latter has been cheating the workers with tricked scales. In a fight on the coal tipple Lawler is thrown from the structure when the iron bar with which he seeks to brain Tom is caught in the machinery, and with the strike over, Tom goes home to find that Alice is at last willing to admit her love.

"The Chorus Lady"

Heart Interest and Amusing Comedy Make Adaptation of Well Known Play Pleasing Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

James Forbes' popular stage play which several years ago served as a vehicle for Rose Stahl is now being offered in screen form with Margaret Livingston in the title role. Many of the situations in the play have been retained and others built up so as to use the greater possibilities of the camera.

As it now stands, "The Chorus Girl" is an entertaining racing drama with a lot of amusing comedy and a generous sprinkling of heart interest, and it should prove a pleasing attraction in the average theatre.

While there is a lot of racing stuff, including a fire at the stables, resulting in the blinding of the hero's horse, and a race in which this horse wins despite this handicap, these have been subordinated to the dramatic situation which was the big scene of the play. In this scene, which furnishes the climax, the chorus lady, learning that her younger sister has been lured to the villain's apartment, goes there and does not hesitate to blast her own good name and risk losing her fiance by shielding her sister.

Margaret Livingston gives a good characterization of the leading role, showing to advantage in the comedy as well as the human interest situations. Philo McCullough is a capable villain and Virginia Lee Corbin attractive as the silly younger sister. Alan Roscoe, while satisfactory in the role opposite the star, has little to do, for the romantic element is somewhat subordinated.

The story has been well directed by Ralph Ince, who has introduced a number of situations that have proved sure-fire in the past, and there is a real dramatic kick in the climax. The leading character is one that will appeal strongly to the average patron because of its human and heart interest qualities, and there are a number of good laughs. We believe that the majority of spectators will find it entertaining.

Patricia O'Brien, a chorus girl, returns home when her show goes on the rocks and saves Dan Mallory's horse, Lady Belle, when his racing stables catch fire. Dan and Pat had planned to marry but this setback causes her to return to the stage, and finding that a philanderer, Crawford, is after her little sister Nora, she takes Nora with her to the city. Both girls get in a show and the owner gives a party, afterwards paying each girl $50.00. Both go to get the money to help Dan, as Lady Belle has gone blind. Dan decides to race Lady Belle, anyway, and she wins $20,000. Nora has given Crawford money to bet but he puts it on another horse. To try to get her money back, which belonged to the other girls, she goes to Crawford's apartment. Pat follows and when Dan and Mrs. O'Brien appear, to save Nora, Pat appears from an adjoining room. Dan denounces her and she returns home to get her clothes. Dan then recognizes the bracelet that Nora is wearing as having seen it on an arm through a door in Crawford's apartment. He tells what he knows and everything turns out all right with Pat and Dan's wedding.

Bill Steiner's Leo Maloney Western Has All the Elements of Corking Entertainment

Reviewed by Edward Wilson

"The Trouble Buster" is five reels of fast-moving action, Western in type but with nothing that can be labelled "rough stuff," and seemingly certain to satisfy any audience drawn by the exhibitor who finds action Western his strong pullers.

We witnessed "The Trouble Buster" with an audience which had a good sprinkling of youngsters, and aside from stating that the adults appeared to fully enjoy it we think that the full purpose of the review can be summed up by the fact that the kiddies found it pretty hard to resist the desire to express their approval loudly. You can't say any more to the theatre man who knows this type of picture.

Leo Maloney has an agreeable, likeable personality and should travel far if they continue to give him as much of story and action as this one has. The direction is clean-cut and utilizes opportunities presented by the incidents to the fullest. There is a clear vein of comedy running throughout the picture.

"Too Much Youth"

Richard Holt Has Leading Role in Story of Jazzy Youth's Reformation

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Too Much Youth," a Duke Worne Production for Gerson Pictures Corporation, is another in the current series of motion pictures that delineate what happens to youths and flappers who jazz too much. Treated at first as a comedy-drama, it later swings into melodrama, with the hero driving his car across a burning bridge to rescue the heroine from a forest fire.

Richard Holt has the leading role as chief spirit of the Never Sleeps. He registers effectively in the lighter sequences and is satisfactory when called upon for a display of emotions. Sylvia Breamer is a serious-minded heroine. Walter Perry is asked to provide the chief comedy, and while at times he over-acts, he ought to be liked by the audiences. The other parts are quite secondary in importance.

This production is well scened and photo-comic, and moves smoothly. Faults can be found only with the technical construction, such as the obvious attempt to provide a thrill by the introduction of the forest fire and a few instances of weak character portrayal. For instance, it seems hardly believable that the youth, intoxicated with wine and hilarity, should decide to mend his ways simply because he sees an attractive girl in the cabaret. Yet this incident is made the turning point in his life. Fortunately it is strengthened later on by landing the hero in jail and having his father talk turkey.

Story

Mark Kenton worries about Jimmy, his jazzy son, and enlists the aid of Pat Casey, prohibition agent. Jimmy, drunk in a cabaret, is attracted by a girl, Marguerite Crandall, informs her so and says that he will reform. The girl's escort knocks him down and he is locked up. The elder Kenton promises to get Jimmy out of jail if he will seriously undertake a real estate deal for him in San Francisco. Jimmy makes the rash statement he will close it before sleeping. To teach him a lesson Mark Kenton 'phones George Crandall to stall Jimmy for a while. Casey accompanies Jimmy to see that he keeps his word. The youth finds Marguerite Crandall to be the girl he admired in the cabaret. He rescues her from a forest fire and turns over a new leaf.

"Fisherman's Luck"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Paul Terry's cat and farmer characters go fishing in this Aesop's Film Fables reel. The mouse dons a diver's helmet, goes down on the river floor and lures fish to the cat's hook. The adventures of all three are many and highly ludicrous. We liked this subject as one of the best Terry has put out in recent weeks.—S. S.

"A Fox Hunt"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

This Hal Roach-"Spat Family" subject features Frank Butler, Sidney D'Albrook and Laura Roessing. The humor is characteristic of the series and generally effective, though the comedy is not as good as some of its predecessors. Horses refuse to be ridden, characters blame each other for mistakes and the woman again awakens astonishment at the way she nonchalantly accepts hard falls and rough treatment.—S. S.

Pathe Review No. 8

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

The principal subject is "Table Talk," another of the "Etiquette" series, showing common social errors at the dinner table, such as eating with a knife. This proceeds to wax witty at the expense of erring ones and will be hailed with merriment by people versed in etiquette. Just how others will receive it is a matter of conjecture. "White Art" is composed of camera studies of snow, and there is a Pathecolor of Denver in the "Visiting Our Own America" series.—S. S.

"Sporting Armor"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

This Grantland Rice Sportlight furnishes an interesting comparison of the armor of old days of knights and round tables and the body protections worn by present-day athletes. While the athletic equipment is familiar to most of us, still the comparisons are so aptly made and the subtitle comments so well phrased that this subject holds the interest throughout. It was produced by John L. Hawkinson.—S. S.

"Tempest Cody's Man Hunt"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

This is a reissue of another of Universal's Tempest Cody series of westerns, with Marie Walcamp in the title role. The titling would indicate that it was made when audiences were not so familiar with the conventional western material, as there is an explanation as to what rustlers are, etc. The film, however, has plenty of action. The plot deals with the escape of a rustler and his capture single handed by Tempest following a snappy fight in which the rustler falls over an embankment after she has lassooed him and hangs dangling in the air until the posse arrives, while she climbs up the rope to safety.—C. S. S.

"Seeing Red"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

An issue in Universal's "Battling Cowboy" series starring Billy Sullivan in the role of a chap with a fiery temper who has a difficult time controlling it; this number is well up to the standard of the series in entertainment value. Billy is cast as an Australian who meets with adventures in our great West. This time he shows his skill with an Australian whip by knocking a pistol out of a bullies hand before he can draw. One of the spectators hires him to get his son away from the control of the bully who is a crook. He succeeds by stealing into the cabin at night and binding the drunken gang. An unusual note shows the girl in the case to be the wife of the man he is to rescue. This will disappoint those who demand romance, but a feature of this series is the fact that in no episode is the romance carried to conclusion; always there is the cut-back to the situation in which Billy almost killed his best friend.—C. S. S.

"The Lost Chord"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This is one of the series of single reelers in which Bert Roach, the star, appears as the butler, Neely Edwards as the husband, and Alice Howell as the wife. The trouble this time is caused by loss of a ball of cord. A new angle of the flivver situation occurs, when a man sawing into a log also cuts the Ford in two parts. Edwards has most of the comedy and meets with a lot of rough and tumble experiences. Getting into a hammock he is dragged by the auto, drenched by a street sprinkler, blown up by firecrackers and chased by a bull. Borrowing a suit from a scarecrow he rescues the rear of the flivver and takes it home but gets in dutch because he threw away the cord.—Fairly amusing.—C. S. S.

"Idaho"

Exciting Pathe Serial of the Western Mining Camp in the Early Days Should Please Serial Fans

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As would be inferred from the title, "Idaho," Pathe's newest serial, is a story of the West. The scenes are laid in the state which bears the name, during the period when the mining camps were without law or order and peopled by all classes, with a generous sprinkling of desperadoes.

The plot concerns a family which starts out to find wealth. The son is killed and later, just as the goal is near, the father is killed, leaving only his daughter, who dons her brother's clothes and vows vengeance on her father's murderer. The only one who knows her secret is a doctor, who fears to aid her, and a despatch rider who openly allies himself with her.

The first three episodes shown for review reveal an interesting story filled with melodramatic action and typical serial situations the climax of which carry the suspense over. The first episode ends with the shooting of the father and burning of an important letter that shows him to be the partner of a man who has struck wealth. The second concludes with an attack of the girl and the despatch rider from ambush by one of the thugs; while the third has as its climax a chase of the desperadoes who stampede their horses, with the girl lying wounded in their pathway.

A good pace is established in the first episode and this is continually accelerated, the third having unusually rapid action, centering around a fast-moving sequence in a saloon which ends in fighting and the escape of the desperadoes, while the despatch rider is wounded.

Vivian Rich has the leading role, with Mahlon Hamilton playing opposite. Miss Rich is a good selection and does excellent work. Attractive as a girl, she shows force and sincerity in her masquerade as the boy. Hamilton with a role of lesser importance is entirely satisfactory.

We believe this to be the first serial for Pathe directed by Robert F. Hill, although he has had experience elsewhere, and he has made a good job with "Idaho." The story is even more interesting and consistent than the average serial, and there is an abundance of thrills and stirring action.

"Idaho" should prove a good box-office attraction.

"Water Wagons"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is a rollicking Mack Sennett subject featuring Andy Clyde, Madeline Hurlock, Sid Smith and John J. Richardson. The chief situation is a boat race and the chief boat is a truly marvelous affair—combination submarine, automobile and sailing vessel. While the picture follows the usual slapstick routine, the gags are exceptionally well chosen and well put over, and the result is a comedy of more than ordinary entertainment. It ought to be good for at least fifty guffaws and as many giggles. It is one of those comedies which occasionally turn a projection room filled with hard-boiled critics into a place of merriment.—S. (Educational—Instructive—One Reel)

The newest of the Secrets of Life series produced by Louis H. Tolhurst for Principal Pictures Corp. deals with general facts in regard to insects and brings out the point that with the exception of the spider family all insects have six legs, also that insects are vastly different in every way from all other forms of animal life, and several of these differences are pointed out. An interesting experiment shows the head of an ant holding up heavy weights, which in proportion would represent a weight of about a dozen big locomotives for a man. This number is instructive, but as it deals considerably with general facts and some little known insects, it will probably not be so interesting to the general public as some of the earlier numbers.—C. There are a lot of good laughs in the newest Bobby Vernon Comedy distributed by Educational. Bobby appears as an artist who goes through a lot of exciting experiences. His rival ruins the picture he is painting, his tailor takes his trousers for an unpaid bill. He borrows the janitor's and is chucked out of a restaurant to which he takes his girl. Deciding to commit suicide he goes on top of the steel fraamework of a new building and comes very near falling several times, but finally finds himself back on the ground. This idea has been used before but there are some clever bits worked in here. Next he hires a gunman who uses various disguises, such as a postman, an old woman, etc., and every time Bobby sees anyone dressed like this he is in mortal fear. Finally he tries to get away and lands on a target out in the ocean used for battleship practice. In the meantime his girl doctors up the picture and sells it. Then there is a chase to get hold of him and prevent the gunmen from doing his work. Altogether it is a fast moving comedy with a connected story, that should prove a good attraction for the comedy fan.—C. S. S.

"Nobody's Sweetheart"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

One of the best of the series of Century Comedies starring clever Wanda Wiley is this two-reeler in which she appears as a hungry and homeless girl who inveigles a friendly cop into putting over a scheme by which she is to order a meal and he will pretend to arrest her. The plan goes wrong and another cop does arrest her. She gives him the slip by the familiar device of substituting a clothing store dummy. Seeking refuge in a detective agency, the boss uses her in visiting a notorious cafe to find stolen jewels. She gets a lot of cops to come on the scene by kicking them in the shins and breaking the station house window, and finally the boss proposes to her. The situations here have all been used before, but Miss Wiley succeeds in making them thoroughly amusing and "Nobody's Sweetheart" should prove a good comedy for the majority of spectators.—C. S. S.

"Welcome Danger"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

In addition to Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance, a newcomer, Eddie Nelson has a prominent role in this Cameo Comedy, which is built on the familiar idea of newlyweds who are visited by the wife's relatives who treat the husband with scant respect and make themselves thoroughly at home. Nelson appears as an eccentric chap. Various amusing situations are introduced, some new and some old, and in the end a severe storm wrecks the bungalow and floods the place with water. It is up to the Cameo average as a laughgetter.—C. S. S.

Lubliner & Trinz Have Five Houses Building in Chicago

Lubliner & Trinz have five new Chicago Theatres under construction at the present time, the Tower Theatre at 63rd and Harper avenue, the Grove at 71st and Cottage Grove avenue, the State at Madison and Maynard, the Harding at Milwaukee and Sawyer and the Belmont at Belmont and Lincoln. Other projects are being considered by the circuit. When the building program for 1925 is completed, it is predicted by the management that it will be the greatest in the history of the circuit.

Another new picture theatre is projected for Maywood by the Lynch Miller interests, the latest house will be located at 16th and Madison Street and will seat 1200.

The meeting of the exhibitor committee and the projectionists for the consideration of new working rules has been postponed until a latter date.

Horace Green has purchased an interest in the Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Ill., and will give the house his personal attention.

Passek and Lock have bought the Amuse-U Theatre, Dupo, Ill., from Henry Welch.

The center of movie theatre interests along Milwaukee Avenue is at Division and Ashland Avenue, where the Chopin, Ascher Crown, Lyric and American Theatres are located. This is a Polish neighborhood and the houses all enjoy a good business throughout the week.

J. E. Ervin and Walter Taylor, exhibitors of Bloomington, Ill., were recent visitors in Chicago. So was W. E. Frey of Danville.

Prof. Arthur White, well known orchestra conductor in Western Illinois and Eastern Iowa, now is the leader at Columbia Theatre at Davenport, Ill., running pictures and five Orpheum time acts. Harry Chappell is house manager.

Peter Schaefer of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and his brother Fred Schaefer, owner of the Crystal Theatre, accompanied by their families, left for a tour around the world last week. The boys gave them a fine send-off.

F. L. McCurdy and Robert Ruch have sold the Magic Theatre, Pearson, Iowa, to J. W. Paddock who will operate the house for pictures only in the future.

Carl Powers of the Empress Theatre at Malvern seems to be in bad luck. For the second time in the last few months fire has damaged the house. Defective wiring is blamed for both blazes.

The Lincoln Theatre, Fulton, Ill., has been sold by the DeNume management to M. Peterson.

The J. and J. Theatre at Hume, Ill., will not close for the winter. Other houses in the coal mining territory have been hard hit. The Brooklyn Theatre, Brooklyn, Ill., Knox Theatre, Carrier Mills, Ill. and Victory Theatre, Farmerville, Ill., will close this month.

George MacDonald has been named manager of the new Vic Theatre, Sheffield and Belmont avenue, Chicago, under the ownership of Mrs. P. J. Kohl. He was formerly in charge of a South Side house and is well known along Film Row. The house has been equipped with a fine organ.

Orr and McCullum have taken over the management of the Edna Theatre, Gibson City, Ill.

Dick Diamond has sold the Castle Theatre, Havana, Ill., to William A. Clark, who will run pictures exclusively.

J. L. McCurdy, managing director of the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, has installed a nifty cashier's cage in the State street entrance. It is a work of art that lures many a passerby into the theatre.

A. B. Simpkins has been made manager of the new Bijou Theatre, Abingdon, Ill. The house is owned by the Abingdon Picture Corporation Co.

The Rialto Theatre of Jones, Linick and Schaefer celebrated its eighth anniversary last week with a fine vaudeville and picture bill. Manager Rosenblum wore a wide smile over the big business.

E. A. Gump has taken over the management of the Washington Theatre, Belleville, Ill., from Robert Cluster.

Dave Natelson has been made manager of the New Dearborn Theatre, Chicago, of Lubliner & Trinz, coming from the Pershing Theatre.

Mrs. I. W. Rodgers, well known exhibitor of Cairo, Ill., has bought the Barth Theatre, Carbondale, Ill.

O. S. Woll of the Merchants Theatre at San Jose, Ill., is planning to enlarge his house and install new equipment.

C. W. Spanuth will reopen the Ashland Theatre on the South Side. Extensive alterations are being made.

Texas

Vitagraph's branch office in Dallas, Texas, will soon be housed in a building which promises to be the last word in film exchange construction. It is being erected at 302-4 Jefferson street, in the heart of the film exchange district and just between the Fox and Famous Players-Lasky branch offices. It will be two stories, 30 by 90 feet, of reinforced concrete, with an ornamental brick front.

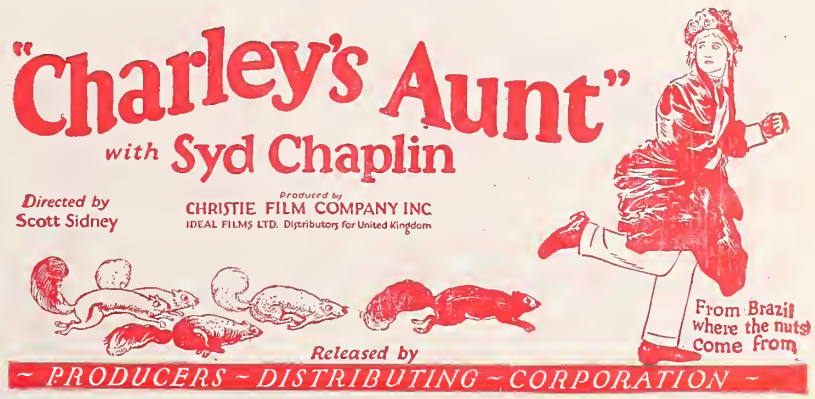
It is the boast of Vitagraph that in all the twenty-eight years of its existence a fire has never started in any of its exchanges and the new building will be more than ever an insurance against disaster. Vitagraph expects to move in about April 1.

News comes to this department from all over the country.

Keep in touch with the fellow you used to know, who moved away.

And about him and we'll try to locate him for you.

This department wishes to correct its erroneous statement that Managing Director David Perkins of the Strand, Lowell, Mass., has been staging a Jubilee and Anniversary Month. It should have read "Mr. Perkins of the Merrimack Square Theatre," H. G. Cummings, house manager, informs us by letter. Thanks.



He Showed the City Boys How

It took a small town exhibitor to come to the big city and show the boys how to get his theatre on the front page of the big town's leading newspapers. The small town exhibitor was Chester J. (Chet) Gruber. He put Miner's Theatre of Collinsville, Ill., on Page 1 of the St. Louis Star.

The Star, publicizing the opening of its new radio broadcastnig station WIL, was using big front-page space to popularize it. Chet, in the modest way smart showmen have, sold the Star the idea that its listeners needed his monologue.

Chet knocked 'em dead "on the air," just as he used to in Keith, Pantages and Orpheum vaudeville. And he knocked the St. Louis gang "twice as dead" when the "tough" Star gave him a big send-off" and heralded him as the manager of Miner's Theatre, Collinsville, Ill.—in a big "box" at the top of Page 1.

The Star also named "Chet's" handsome countenance in one of its issues, and gave him mention several times in advance of and after the radio talk.

Loew's Cleveland Theatres Do Extensive Broadcasting

Does radio hurt the theatre business? That question is being asked a great deal nowadays. In Cleveland, Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., has gone into broadcasting extensively, limiting it to an hour's entertainment at a time.

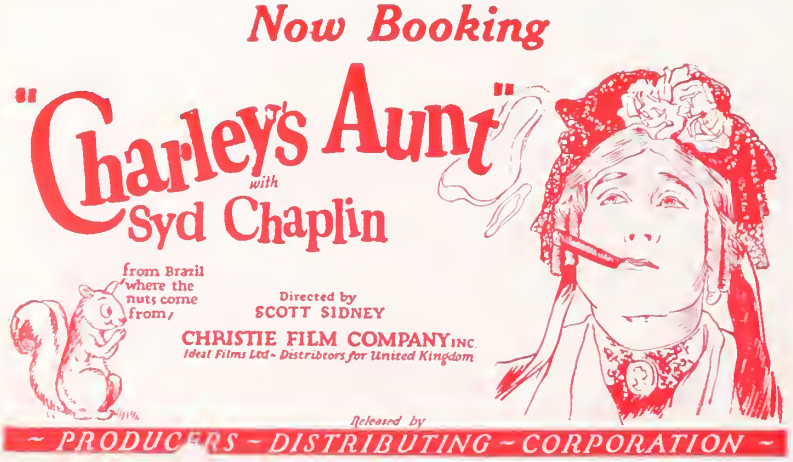
On Sundays the Allen Theatre broadcasts a symphony concert from 1 to 2 p. m. This is by a combined orchestra of 75 men, directed by Phillip Spitalny. The Loew management is trying out this early Sunday afternoon symphony idea, and thinks that it might as well be broadcasted, for the advertising value there is in it for the theatre and its music.

On Monday evenings there is an hour's program from the State Theatre. In this house, on the mezzanine floor, the Loew people have built a studio where actors from the vaudeville program of the State and performers from other Loew theatres broadcast. Big musical acts are broadcast direct from the stage, while the new organ is always included on this program. This program is put on from 7 to 8 o'clock.

One of Cleveland's first neighborhood theatres, the Carlyon, is soon to close its doors and be remodeled into a commercial building. Across the street from the Carlyon, at Superior and East 112th street, a new house is going up. It is being built by Louis Abrams & Co. and has been leased to Klinger & Lustig, who now operate the Carlyon. The new theatre will seat 1,000. The building will cost $150,000. It will be finished June 1 and will be called the Ambassador. Louis Abrams & Co. has gone into theatre building and remodeling quite extensively. They are now remodeling the old Keith Prospect theatre into a commercial block and are building the new Collinwood Y Theatre. A few months ago they completed a theatre at Hough and East 79th street.

Keith's East 105th Street Theatre has changed its policy from straight vaudeville, with two performances a day, to continuous programs of vaudeville and pictures. It is believed this was brought about by the change of policy at Loew's State, which went into a successful combination policy the first of the year.

"The Thief of Bagdad" went four weeks in the Stillman Theatre, in its first Cleveland engagement. And it did pretty good business all the way. The first week was record-breaking, but attendance kept up with the exception of a couple of days during the early part of the fourth week.



An Oldtime Film Show

"Pop" Dibble Puts One on Successfully in Branford, Conn.

Readers of this department will not have to be introduced to "Pop" Dibble of Branford, Conn., for they will remember him as "The Daddy of Them All," an exhibitor who has exhibited continuously since 1896. To them the following letter from "Pop" will be of interest:

Dear Mr. Smith:—I am enclosing clipping from New Haven Register correspondent and program of an "Old Time Show" which I gave with great success Thursday night at the Park Theatre. You will note, I am still in harness, not having missed a night in the projection room of Park Theatre in the past nine years. In fact, I haven't yet missed a date in the business the past fifty-three years (including old stereopticon work.) So I am hopeful of staying in quite a while longer. If I ever do take a day or two off, I am surely going to run down to the big city and will surely call to see you, friend Smith. I read Moving Picture World every week and always interested in your department of same.

The "old time show" which I gave here included, first, a fine collection of hand colored stereopticon views (in the old fashioned wood frames) which I showed right here in old Branford Town Hall just fifty-three years ago, and then throughout the New England states. Next I showed a lot of fine Spanish American war views and some films which I showed with them in 1898 ——"Remember the Maine" and Colonel Teddy Roosevelt of the Rough Riders and many other views. Then I selected from about forty full reels of old films which I have. I made up two full reels of assorted subjects, short comics, etc., and also showed a lot of old announcement slides such as "Gentlemen, Please Don't Smoke," "Ladies and Gentlemen Please Remove Your Hats," "Please Do Not Spit on the Floor," "Kindly Remain Seated During the Illustrated Song," "All Over Now, The End, Please Call Again," etc., etc. The show pleased immensely.

Well, friend Sumner, will close for this time wishing you best of health and success in your work. Very sincerely yours,

JOHN P. DIBBLE.

P. S.—My own health is still good, I am very thankful to write. I will be 72 years of age next birthday, August 22, and you should see me stepping up and down the "projection room" ladder!

Oklahoma

L. E. Brewer has purchased the Victory and Hamly theatres at Pauls Valley, Okla., from J. G. Jenson.

The Orpheum Theatre at Lawton, Okla., has been remodelled.

A new theatre will be built at Cromwell, Okla., in the near future.

C. W. Wakefield has purchased a half interest with Fred Savage in the Criterion Theatre at Enid, Okla., and will be manager. The theatre will be completely remodeled.

Stebbins Makes Success of Kansas City "Tea Matinees"

"Tea matinees" are proving a great success at the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City. The custom of serving afternoon tea to women attending matinees was adopted the other day by Jack Stebbins. The mezzanine balcony was re-arranged and re-decorated to serve as a tea room.

"What could be greater inducement to a woman who is weary of shopping than to offer her a comfortable reclining chair and a soothing cup of tea, in addition to the regular program?" asked Mr. Stebbins. "I'll tell you it draws them in. It's a great policy and I'm going to stick to it for a while. The cost of the venture is small, but the result is large."

Theatres in the vicinity of Arma, Kas., are looking forward with hope that the scarlet fever quarantine in mining camps may soon be lifted, the theatres now being closed. As the epidemic is of a light nature, it is believed the theatres soon will be able to reopen.

Edward Frazier, owner of the Empress Theatre, Paola, Kas., has had many reasons for happiness but the joy supreme came the other day with the birth of a "bouncing baby boy."

The audience at the Regent Theatre, Newton, Kas., was becoming impatient. O. K. Mason, manager, paced back and forth in front of the house, his eyes focused anxiously towards the sky. "The Riddle Rider," a Universal serial, had been advertised at the theatre, but due to a delay it had become necessary to rush the film to Newton by airplane. Newton is 200 miles from Kansas City. One hour and forty minutes after leaving Kansas City the plane arrived, the sight of it bringing joy to the heart of Mr. Mason. Five minutes after the plane landed the picture was on the screen.

Jack Quinlan, manager of the Mainstreet Theatre, first-run house of Kansas City fell heir to some unexpected publicity when he booked Wayne ("Big") Munn, new heavyweight wrestling champion, and his manager, Gabe Kaufman of Kansas City, for a little skit. Friends of Kaufman on the first night, just as the "act" was at the crucial point, presented him with a large ham, which amused Gabe as much as it did the audience. Of course, you must guess his nationality.

Jackie Coogan? Nix. It is Jackie's mother at six years—then known as "Baby Lillian" in the old California Stock Company.

Kansas City first-run downtown houses had a lively time in racing for newspaper offices to obtain the initial story on the fact that phases of the eclipse would be shown in news reels, the figurative race being won by Harold Finney, manager of the Pantages Theatre, who "put over" the first story.

Destruction of the Liberty Theatre, Columbus, Kas., recently by fire will prove no barrier to N. W. Houston, manager. Already the rebuilding of the theatre is under way. The new house, it is expected, will be completed by May 1. Many improvements will be made, Mr. Houston said.

Montana

W. J. Sullivan, manager of the Silver Bow Amusement Company, who has been visiting West Coast cities seeking rest and quiet from the strenuous theatre work of the past few months, is reported as much improved in health and hopes to return to Butte in the next week or two.

At Great Falls the First Presbyterian Church has installed a projector and is planning to have a picture program every evening and every afternoon at 4 o'clock.

"Peter Pan" has been playing in Deer Lodge at the Rialto to packed houses. Society has given a number of box parties.

Associated vaudeville is becoming a habit in Butte. Entertainment de luxe at popular prices is the aim of Merle Davis of the Broadway Theater, who also combines a picture entertainment with the regular program three nights a week.

Detroit

David T. Nederlander, owner of the Shubert-Detroit Theatre has purchased a large Woodward avenue site on the outskirts of the city and plans to erect a theatre building to cost in the neighborhood of half a million. It will seat 3,000. This particular district of Detroit is enjoying one of the biggest building booms in the history of the city and a theatre site was looked upon as one of the real plums.

Miss Freda Levine, who has been manager's secretary for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan since its organization, has resigned. Her service in the position totals five years.

Oil Cash in House

Oil wells, as a rule, have little to do with picture theatres, but the $60,000 improvement work to start soon on the Belmont Theatre, a suburban house of Kansas City, was made possible by an investment of Edward Grogger, manager, in a Wagner County, Okla., oil well. The well "hit," so the Belmont, located at St. John and Oakley avenues, will receive the "dressing up" of its life.

The theatre will be entirely remodeled and will be of terra cotta, facing St. John avenue on a 75-foot frontage, and will be 125 feet deep. A 600-seat balcony will be built, enlarging the capacity of the house from 1,100 to 1,800. A stage, large and elaborately equipped, will be one of the features.

"I intend to start construction work in a few days," Mr. Grogger said. "And not a dollar will stand in the way of all possible improvements and conveniences for patrons.

Mr. Grogger built the theatre ten years ago and it has been in operation continuously since then.

Arkansas

Herman Hunt has purchased the Victory Theatre at Ozark, Ark., and changed its name to the New Ozark. New equipment and seats have been installed.

C. J. Singleton has purchased the New Theatre at Dardanelle, Ark.

The Yellville Theatre Co. has purchased the Realart Theatre at Flippin, Ark., and will operate it in connection with their theatre at Yellville.

Forest Nogart has purchased the Rex Theatre at Brinkley, Ark.

R. T. Megibben has repurchased the Capitol Theatre at Newport, Ark., from the Amusement Co.

R. Blair has bought the Kozy Theatre at Pocahontas, Ark., from Roy Duty.

The Gem Theatre at Little Rock, Ark., lost $100 by robbery January 20.

Alvin Chapman and S. J. Stell have opened their new Palace Theatre at Smackover, Ark., with pictures and vaudeville.

Sam Norwood has sold the Cozy Theatre at Lincoln, Ark., to Hilton Bros.

Stanley Neal, salesman for the local F. B. O. exchange, and his brother-in-law, H. T. McFarland, a prominent coal operator of West Virginia, are planning the erection of a modern theatre building in Mt. Lebanon, one of Pittsburgh's fastest-growing suburbs, which is as yet without a theatre of any kind. Plans for the new structure have been prepared and completion of the building is expected by next summer. The house will seat 900 and will cost $150,000. Neal and McFarland will also erect a large public garage adjacent to the theatre, and it is expected to have this structure completed by spring.

Sol Silverman, well-known here as former owner of the Princess Theatre at Donora, and who has spent the past two years on the Pacific Coast, has heard the old home town call, coupled with the theatre business, and has returned here to manage Sam Gould's Gould and Arcadia theatres on the North Side, succeeding the late Frank Feri.

Buffalo, N. Y.

A second theatre collapse from heavy snowfall on the roof occurred in Syracuse when the old Highland Theatre, 327 Park street, caved in. The roof fell under the weight of many tons of snow and the pressure forced the side wall to bulge out. Concrete blocks were hurled into the homes of Ernest and George Rapp, next door to the theatre. The Highland was erected by Jacob Borne, who, it is understood, disposed of the property, and the name of the present owner could not be learned. It has not been used for pictures in two years. As a result of this second theatre accident, there is to be a general inspection of houses in Syracuse. The roof of the Elmwood collapsed from the weight of snow a few weeks ago.

Frank Luchowski, 127 Jones street, Buffalo was soaked five iron men when he was arraigned before Judge George E. George, charged with purchasing tickets of admission to the Plaza Theatre, a Buffalo East Side community theatre, for two boys under the age of 16. The boys, with the tickets, entered the theatre unaccompanied by parent or guardian.

A contract has been let by M. Shea for a mammoth orchestra organ which is to be placed in the new $1,500,000 Buffalo theatre now being erected by the Shea Amusement Company. Work on the excavation is going ahead rapidly and the buildings occupying the site of the entrance and lobby have been demolished.

Schine Has Too Many Theatres in New York to Name Offhand

How would you like to own so many picture theatres that when someone stopped you and inquired just how many you had that particular day, you would be forced to stop and figure up? Not so bad. That is exactly the condition Meyer Schine of Gloversville was in the other day while in Albany doing a bit of shopping. This "bit" in Mr. Schine's case generally ranges anywhere from $15,000 or so, to ten times that amount, for the two Schine boys, who started a few years ago on the proverbial shoestring, now own the biggest chain in New York State.

"How many theatres have you now? Fifty-two or fifty-three?" was asked Mr. Schine.

"Let's see," replied Mr. Schine, adding a moment later, "I can't tell you offhand until I stop and figure up."

And then Mr. Schine went on to tell of having just taken over the Opera House in Carthage, giving him control of the northern village.

It would be of interest if someone could figure out just exactly what the recent blizzard in New York State cost the Schine brothers. In Auburn, for instance, where they have two theatres, over four feet of snow fell in two days. All the houses remained open, but with managers unable to ship out and with exchanges unable to ship in, many of the houses with pictures booked for two days kept on running the same pictures until such time as the railroads opened up.

Walter and Noma Suckno of Albany are a couple of enterprising youngsters. Their latest are amateur nights at the Regent. They are not afraid of using newspaper space and are demonstrating the training they received from their late father.

Remember E. F. Gaylord, who ran Amusement Hall at Cranberry Lake, who operated his own machine, took all the time in the world to change his reels in order that his patrons might visit the luncheon he conducted on the floor below? Well, the theatre went up in smoke last week, burned completely to the ground. But Mr. Gaylord does not intend to let such a thing as a fire put him out of business, for he is already planning to rebuild.

A bit stiff and lame, William Rafferty of Syracuse, quarter owner in Farash Theatres, Inc., of Schenectady, was in town during the week. Everyone knows him as just plain "Bill" Rafferty. He is a power in Democratic circles. It seems that during the big storm last week, when Syracuse was hardest hit of any city in the state, an arrangement was made to the end that when the fire-bells rang at 6 o'clock the other night, everyone should grab a shovel and do his bit toward cleaning up the street. Mr. Rafferty shoveled for an hour, the first time in twenty years, and as a result he is complaining of lame arms and shoulders.

The Berinstein brothers purchased land last week in Albany adjoining their Colonial Theatre. Julius Berinstein admitted that it was a forerunner to the enlargement of the Colonial from the present 1,500 capacity to 2,500. And what's more, if Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, a Proctor house, a few blocks away, continues with pictures during the spring and summer, there is a mighty strong possibility that either vaudeville or stock will hold the boards at the Colonial.

Donning a straw as he strolls along some Florida winter resort, John Hart, a well known exhibitor in Bennington, Vt., spending the winter in the South, must smile a bit these days as he reads the home papers and their accounts of record-breaking storms.

The Fitzers of Syracuse are giving some thought toward taking over the American in Troy, formerly operated by Ben Apple and which has now been closed for about a month. The Fitzers run the Empire in Syracuse.

The exhibitors in this section appear to be faring pretty well. Mrs. Benjmain Taylor, owner and manager of the Richmond Theatre in North Adams, Mass., is on her way to Europe for a three months' trip of the Continent, including the Holy Land.

Attorney Thomas E. Shean of the Rialto in Massena doesn't intend to be caught again by weather conditions. The other day he notified Film Row to ship a week's consignment, if possible, on account of the uncertain delivery through storm conditions.

Should the film exchange or the exhibitor from whose theatre the film was taken stand the loss? This is a point under dispute in Albany and arising from film that has been stolen during the last few weeks. For instance, at Proctor's Schenectady house, a two-reel feature, a two-reel western and a single news real were taken. Some of the exchanges have charged up the film to the theatre, and a howl has gone up.

Bob Wagner, of Little Falls, laughed himself sick last week. The reason was the Y. M. C. A. minstrel show, given for two nights at Mr. Wagner's theatre, the Gateway.

More improvements are scheduled for the Leland in Albany. They include the installation of a big chandelier of prism glass, the carrying of the ceiling to the back wall to kill certain draughts and the installation of more ventilating fans. Incidentally, Oscar Perrin is looking out for the comfort of his employes and is installing radiators, similar to those in street cars, in his cashier booths.

Meyer Schine, president of the Albany Zone Committee, announces that at this month's meeting of the committee a decision will be reached as to how often the committee is to meet from now on. Mr. Schine had a conference with Walter Hays, president of the New York State M. P. T. O., in Buffalo last week.

Bill Smalley, who has a theatre in the college town of Hamilton, certainly did not suffer last week when Dean Thomas Wearing of the Colgate Theological Seminary came out with a criticism of "Secrets," declaring in a talk to the student body that the young men should register a protest "against such absolutely demoralizing pictures." The Dean went on to say that he had sat through a part of the picture and then left the theatre. The result of the Dean's talk was what might be expected. The students fairly mobbed the place "to decide" if the Dean's criticism was justified.

Harry Lazarus of Kingston has quite a proposition under way in the theatre which he will build this summer. It will seat 2,000, work will start in May and the theatre will be but a unit of a block housing several stores.

Having tried one serial with success, Samuel Goldstein, owner of the State in Utica, has now booked "Galloping Hoofs."

The Carthage Opera House, which was kept open mainly to furnish opposition to the Schine brothers, was acquired last week by the latter, giving them entire control in the northern village.

Dr. J. Victor Wilson, recent manager of the Robbins theatres in Watertown, was to have been on his way to Europe by now to spend a portion of two months at his old home in Denmark. He was tendered a dinner in Watertown last week, at which he was presented with a cane and umbrella. He went to New York. received an offer of a position there and changed his plans.

One of the most aristocratic looking theatres in New York State is located at Walton. It is operated by William C. Smalley and managed by S. C. McGregor. The front of the house resembles an old time southern mansion.

Herman Vineberg, manager of the Mark Strand in Albany, has another task these days in addition to handling the house. Now that the Strand orchestra is broadcasting twice a week, it's up to Herman to get out the radio programs for the newspapers.

Three theatres in Syracuse, the Capitol, Burnett Park and Kernan, were closed a portion of last week when the authorities were fearful that roofs might collapse through the weight of the snow.

By way of a remainder, Fred Elliott, former owner of the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany and one of the pioneer exhibitors in the state, is still on earth, enjoying himself in the Capital City without losing any sleep over bookings and contracts. Mr. Elliott gets down to the theatres once or twice a week and is living the life of Riley.

Seeking to obtain possession of the Cameo Theatre in Bridgeport, now operated by Universal, the Securities Mortgage Company of New York has filed an action in superior court, Bridgeport. The mortgage foreclosure proceedings are for the purpose of satisfaction in the sum of $70,000, alleged to be owned by Peter Dawe. The Cameo formerly was the Dawe Theatre. Universal, which holds a lease on the house, has been named co-defendant in the case.

The Casino Theatre in Sharon was destroyed by a fire early the morning of January 25. The theatre and two adjoining buildings were burned. The fire was discovered in the playhouse.

Marcus Loew has signed a lease for 60 years at a total rental of $5,000,000 for the property adjoining the Pickwick Arms Hotel in Greenwich. It is planned to erect a theatre building at a cost of $500,000. There will also be six stores.

Manager Charlie Benson of Poli's Palace Theatre in Hartford has a fine company of musicians and he doesn't hesitate in the least to let the people of Hartford know who is responsible for the splendid musical programs in the Palace. Osborne Putnam Stearns is conductor of the big orchestra, while O. F. De Veaux presides at the newly installed organ.

The Broadway Theatre in Springfield, one of the Goldstein Brothers' theatres, is selling two tickets for the price of one between 4 and 4:30 p. m. daily, except Saturday and Sunday.

Jacob Finklestein of Gordon's Olympia Theatre was one of the most arden workers of the staff for the success of the Olympia "U" Boys dance held February 6.

Prices have been revised at Gordon's Fields Corner and Codman Square theatres, both in the Dorchester section of Boston. At the Fields Corner the 60-cent seats for Sunday have been cut to 50 cents, while at the Codman Square, where four acts and a feature are presented, there has been a general cut in all prices for the entire week.

The Gordon circuit, which has controlled two theatres in Gloucester, has purchased the Strand in the same city from E. M. Loew. One of the Gordon houses has been closed. Fred Shehay, who has been managing the Strand for Mr. Loew, is continuing in that position.

J. J. Kehoe is a strong drawing card at E. M. Loew's Rialto Theatre in Lowell. And for a very good reason, too. He's conductor of the Rialto Symphonic Orchestra. Mr. Loew is a great sticker for good music and insists that only the best musicians obtainable be employed in his theatres. He recently installed a new organ in his Capitol Theatre in Lynn.

Ed Foley, manager of the Academy Theatre in Haverhill, is one of the hustlingest exhibitors in the old Bay State. And that's what makes his box office such a busy place all of the time.

Quick action by employes of the New Palace Theatre in Boston prevented a panic when a woman yelled "fire," mistaking steam for smoke. The cloud of steam was caused by water escaping from a sprinkler and falling upon a hot radiator. Six hundred persons were in the house at the time.

Employes of the Marcus Loew theatres in Boston and their friends, numbering more than 1,200, held their third annual dance Feb. 6. A banquet was served. Each of the young ladies was given a vanity case. Marie Coleman of Loew's Orpheum Theatre and Claire Mintz of Loew's State Theatre headed the committee in charge of the event.

The Academy, Colonial and Strand theatres in Haverhill have been engaged in a real "wow" of a war for business. Their newspaper advertising space has been greatly increased in the one newspaper in Haverhill.

John W. Hawkins, general manager of the Allen Theatres in New Bedford, has added two vaudeville acts to the Sunday programs at the Capitol Theatre.

The Central Square Theatre of Boston has been incorporated with a capital of of $100,000. The incorporators are Frank Cronin of Arlington, Samuel S. Soul of Belmont and Julius Goodman of Allston.

The Allston Land Corporation of Boston has been incorporated with a capital of $100,000. The incorporators are Nathan Pinansky, Fred Green and Jacob Lourie, all of Boston.

Manager J. Joseph Cahill of the Gordon theatres in Brockton is whooping up things right lively. Brockton Boy Scouts recently appeared in an added attraction arranged by Manager Cahill and proved a healthy stimulant to business.

Providence is now the scene of a great business getting battle, and from the advertisements theatregoers are assured that every show in the city is a humdinger in every respect. Everybody is stressing their low-priced seats in the newspaper ads, and in fact one can see the whole show in most of the houses for 10 cents from opening time in the morning until noon. The Modern Theatre has reverted to its former double-feature policy with a 25-cent admission for any seat from noon to 6 p. m.

I. H. Franklin of New York will manage the new Broadway Theatre, now nearing completion at 209 South Tryon street, Charlotte, which will open the latter part of February, according to announcement from its builder, R. D. Craver. F. J. Goodman of Richmond, Va., a musical director of long experience, has been selected as orchestra director, which will consist of 15 or 20 pieces. Franklin has been at the head of several New York houses, until recently associated in the management of seven vaudeville houses of the Loew circuit at Cleveland and other towns. The theatre will play a straight picture program, it is believed.

The Orpheum Theatre, Greensboro, N. C., playing a picture and vaudeville program, was destroyed by fire last week, starting from unknown causes. The fire started in the early morning and had gained much headway before firemen arrived. The million dollar National Theatre next door was seriously threatened at times by the flames. The Orpheum was operated by the Leitch-Pryor interests who also own the National, and it has not yet been decided whether or not they will rebuild.

The new Webb Theatre, rebuilt from the remains of one of the oldest churches in Shelby, N. C., is rapidly nearing completion and will be open within thirty days. It is being built by Webb Brothers, who are associated in a states right film exchange in Shelby, the B. and W. Booking Office, and will be operated with pictures principally as the attractions.

The Strand Theatre, Charlotte, under the new management of the Roy Williford interests, will soon embark in the production field, having in mind a production entitled "Things You Should Know About Charlotte."

C. L. Hackworth, of Huntsville, Ala., spent several days in Atlanta the past week and stated that reconstruction work on the Grand, which was almost completely destroyed by fire some time back, is under way and will be ready in a couple of months.

C. A. Hartman is operating the Airdome Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., and plans extending his theatre interests shortly. Other theatre owners in Atlanta during the week include George Brown, Imperial, Charlotte, N. C.; C. B. Stiff, Tivoli, Chattanooga; E. R. Rogers, Knoxville, Tenn.; A. E. Van Croiz, Van Croiz Theatre, Melbourne, Fla.; T. G. Coleman, Macon, Ga.; Frank J. Miller, Augusta, Ga.; Montgomery S. Hill, Charlotte.

Exhibitors who are using our Reviews and Straight From the Shoulder as guides in booking pictures, who employ the dependable Current and Advance release chart to lay out their program and allot proper footage so the show will "come out on schedule" and who employ the many ideas in Sargent's Selling the Picture to the Public, bring their use of The Complete Exhibitor Trade Service by reading items about themselves and their friends in this live-wire exhibitor news department.

Scene from Universal's "Phantom of the Opera"

Seattle

B. W. Fey's new Renton Theatre, Renton, Wash., opened February 1 to four capacity shows. Mr. Fey was burned out just before his opening was scheduled on Christmas Day. The front half of the building was destroyed and all the furnishings ruined. Within four weeks' time the house was rebuilt, furnished, decorated and equipped, a brick and concrete furnace room built on in the back of the building, housing a new heating plant, and the opening took place. The house is a 600-seat theatre, modern in every respect, and a great credit to the community. Mr. Fey is a well known exhibitor in the Northwest and he has the best wishes and congratulations of the fraternity.

Nathan Levin has sold his Vaudette in Tacoma to Mr. and Mrs. Wallow. Levin has booked "The Hunchback" into the Tacoma for a run at popular prices. He is putting on a big campaign of advertising.

V. A. Peterson, formerly of the Mission, Georgetown, has taken over the Ruston, Tacoma. He opened with "Welcome Stranger."

Art Hile, manager of the Capitol, hooked up with the city pound, the humane society, a Fox cameraman and a newspaper, framing up a stunt whereby any youngster who called at the theatre with a dollar to pay the license fee could take home a dog that would otherwise be killed in due course of the law. The child must assure the theatre management that he would give the dog a good home. Hile's young son posed for an attractive boy and dog picture which the paper gave page one space to with a story, and the cameraman got a nice shot which was shown at the house later. Hundreds of congratulatory letters and phone calls were received and forty dogs and kids made happy.

According to report received in Seattle, Neal & Allender of Spokane, who has been associated for some time, have split up. Neal gets the Casino and Class A, and Allender the Majestic, Lyric and the new Ritz.

Manager Bender of the Columbia Theatre has ordered complete reseating of his house, selecting loge chairs of Queen Anne cane back and upholstered seats with 60 springs, and matching design in opera chairs with fabrikoid seats and plush backs for the balance of the house. The color scheme is blue and light gray. B. F. Shearer is making the installation. The chairs are Heywood-Wakefield.

William F. Code of the Paramount Theatre has started an innovation in the way of a monthly "Combined road show and vaudeville" in addition to his regular bill. His opener was "A Night in the Sunny South," consisting of four snappy blackface acts. Code gives two nights of this in succession.

Cincinnati

The Palace Theatre, Hamilton, celebrated its fifth anniversary early this month in most elaborate style. The house was decorated lavishly and the orchestra was augmented, twelve musicians being in the pit during the week that the celebration took place. The mayor gave a talk, as did also the ex-mayor who delivered the address of welcome as the city's chief executive when the house originally opened. The Palace Magazine, a monthly house organ, appeared in color with 100 pages. Managing Director Meyer received congratulatory telegrams from many of the screen luminaries.

Theodore Hahn, Jr., director of the Capitol Theatre orchestra in Cincinnati, has been appointed general musical director for all of the theatres in the Libson chain.

J. Thomas Ward, a pioneer exhibitor and father of the motion picture business at Hamilton, Ohio, died at Akron recently.

Through a tie-up with the Hamilton Daily News, Hamilton, Ohio, 8,000 pupils of the public and parochial schools saw "Abraham Lincoln" at the Rialto Theatre.

Youngstown, Ohio, exhibitors are experiencing considerable increased business by reason of changing from a full week to a split week policy. The Dome Theatre, recently acquired by Warner Brothers, as also the Hippodrome and Liberty Theatres, all first-run houses, have inaugurated the split-week policy with fine results.

San Francisco

The remodeling and redecorating of the Haight Theatre, San Francisco, has been completed and this house is now one of the most attractive and comfortable neighborhood houses in the city. Matinee performances were suspended for a month while the work was under way, but these have been resumed. Marked changes were made in the theatre and it is virtually a new house in its present form. Partitions were removed to make a more spacious lobby and foyer, new lighting fixtures, carpets and drapes installed and a fine new box office added. Both interior and exterior have been redecorated. Arrangements have been made for the addition of a new loge section, but the chairs have not yet arrived. The Haight is conducted by Harry Sack and William S. Godfrey, Jr.

Max Graf, producer, will engage in exhibiting as well and is fitting up two small houses on Market street, San Francisco. One of these adjoin the Imperial Theatre while the other is a block further out. Each will seat 400 and it is intended to feature first-run productions at 25 and 35 cents. Mr. Graf is also building a studio in town and plans to resume the production of pictures in July.

The Franklin Theatre at Fifteenth and Franklin streets, Oakland, which has been in the hands of artisans for several months, was reopened early in February by Ackerman & Harris, under the management of Eugene L. Perry. Mr. Perry is well known, having managed at different times the T. & D. Theatre, the State Theatre and the former Franklin Theatre, of Oakland, and until recently was connected with the Louis R. Greenfield amusement interests at San Francisco. The Franklin has been entirely rebuilt, with an exterior in the Hispano Moresque style and the interior decorated in a most restful style. The projection room has been enlarged and new equipment installed throughout. A $25,000 organ has been added. The house was re-opened with "The Dark Swan" and "All Night Long," a comedy.

Louis R. Greenfield, who conducts a chain of theatres at San Francisco, Santa Cruz and Honolulu, is spending a few weeks at the "Paradise of the Pacific" and has arranged to transfer his orchestra leader, Fabello, to the New Princess Theatre of Honolulu.

Work is being rushed on the new theatre of the T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, Inc., at Oak Park. This house will be opened about the middle of February.

J. A. Harvey, Jr., who recently opened a new picture house at Merced, has met with such success with the venture that he is already considering an addition to it which would increase the capacity by more than 300.

Frank Vesley, who has managed several theatres in the National Theatres Syndicate chain, has been placed in charge of the house conducted at Modesto.

Los Angeles

Lou Bard, manager of the Bard Theatre Circuit, has completed plans for the erection of a Class A theatre on West Adams street and Crenshaw boulevard. Work on the structure, which is to cost $400,000, has started. The entire project was financed by the American Mortgage Company.

The theatre, seating 2,000, will be one of the largest suburban theatres in Los Angeles. The auditorium will be of Egyptian design and will contain many novel features, such as a huge ventilating system, a pipe organ costing $50,000 and an immense stage equipped to handle any size vaudeville act or novelty.

Theatres now operated by the Bard interests are the Bard and College theatres, Los Angeles; Bard's Hollywood, Garfield Egyptian, Alhambra, Bard's Pasadena and Bard's Glendale.

The grand opening of the new Rosemary Theatre at Ocean Park will take place next week. This structure, situated on the ocean front between Navy and Marine streets, is of Class A fire-proof construction, containing every possible convenience for its patrons. One main feature is its spacious lounging room on the main floor, with the mezzanine floor also having a special room where one may enjoy the radio concert while waiting for friend or the next show. The foyer is said to be the largest of any theatre in Southern California.

The policy of the Rosemary will be first-run showings of Paramount features and Hal Roach comedies immediately following Los Angeles and Western Vaudeville Managers' Association of vaudeville, which comes as a road show direct from Chicago. The Rosemary Theatre was built by the Raymond Amusement Company, Inc., and is featuring what it claims is a $100,000 curtain.

Mike Gore of West Coast Theatres has announced the proposed building of a new theatre at Slauson and Mesa Drive, Los Angeles. The building will contain an auditorium seating 1,700, with seventeen stores on the ground floor and thirty apartments and eight offices on the second story.

Harry C. Arthur, general manager of the West Coast chain, has returned from a month's jaunt to New York, Washington, Boston and other eastern points. While in New York he booked about sixty vaudeville acts for his theatres

Associated Exhibitors

(Includes Selznick)

BARRIERS BURNED AWAY. Star, Frank Mayo. Very good picture but failed to draw much for us. Middle and working class trade. City of 25,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

BARRIERS BURNED AWAY. Star cast. Very good picture but not as good as could have been. Fire scenes failed to have any suspense in with it. Reminds one of a news reel. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. W. G. Enloe, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

EAST OF BROADWAY. (5,783 feet). Star, Owen Moore. Fine little comedy drama that pleased immensely. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

NEVER SAY DIE. (6 reels). Star, Douglas McLean. Better than his last one but not up to standard of "Hottentot" and "Going Up." Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

NOW OR NEVER. Star, Harold Lloyd. Ran this for third time in city and did very good business at advanced prices. Wish we had more good "cards" like Lloyd. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. W. G. Enloe, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

F. B. O.

AFTER THE BALL. (6,500 feet). Star cast. A picture that drew well for us and pleased. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

AMERICAN MANNERS. (5,200 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. The best Talmadge picture released so far under the F. B. O. banner. Plenty of stunts and it is far more logical than many of the former features with this star. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

BELOVED VAGABOND. (6,217 feet). Star, Carlyle Blackwell. "Made in England." Further comment unnecessary. Tone, okay. Sunday, no, nor any other day. Has little audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BROKEN LAWS. Star Mrs. Wallace Reid. Here is a good picture and a money maker if exploited right as it is full of everything that makes a good picture and will please everyone as it contains a splendid lesson and well handled. Tone, good. Special, yes. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

DAYTIME WIVES. (6,651 feet). Star cast. Good society drama of real life took very well here and drew a good house. Seemed to please about seventy-five per cent. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, very good. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Dexter, New York.

FLASHING SPURS. Star, Bob Custer. Excellent for the "shooting gallery" class of houses but of no value for medium and high grade places. Typical dime novel stuff. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, for low class houses only. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

FOOLS IN THE DARK. (7,002 feet). Star cast. This is a crackerjack picture. Don't be afraid to boost it. Tom Wilson the blackface comedian keeps them in an uproar from start to finish. Boys this picture has everything they want. Thrills, action, love, comedy. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

FOOLS IN THE DARK. (7,002 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. Tom Wilson who takes the part of a colored individual runs away with the picture. This picture drew well for us and gave general satisfaction. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, extra program. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

FOOLS IN THE DARK. (7,002 feet). Star cast. This is a peach of a picture. Tom Wilson the negro sure acts his part fine. Cannot wish for a better picture. Mixed class town of 800. Admission 15-25. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre (250 seats), Albany, Minnesota.

MILLIONAIRE COWBOY. Star, Lefty Flynn. Average good western that seemed to go over in nice shape. Flynn is well liked here, He has a wicked smile that creates a decided personality. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent for western fans only. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

SPIRIT OF THE U. S. A. (8,312 feet). Star cast. Melodrama de luxe. Full of hokum, tears, laughs, etc. Goes over well with masses but I doubt if it is suitable for high class audiences. Farmers and laborers fairly eat it up and call for more. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent for the masses. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

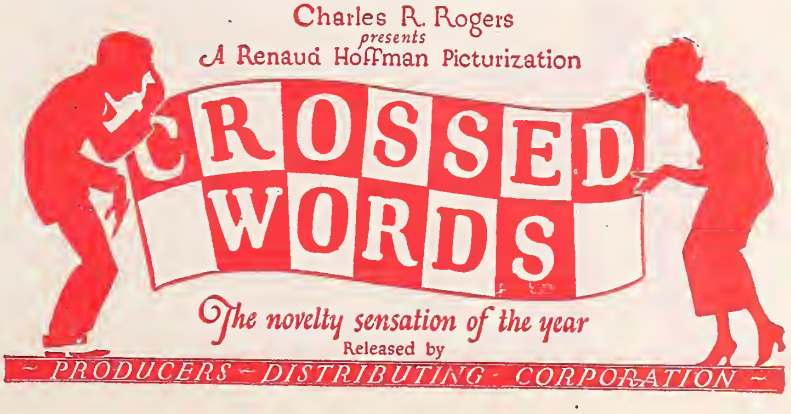
SILENT STRANGER. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Another one of those good westerns with Silver King the horse who certainly is wonderful. Hats off to him. Fills the house every time. One hundred per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Dexter, New York.

SPIRIT OF U. S. A. (8,312 feet). Star, Mary Carr. A picture every child and woman should see and sure was interesting from start to finish. Picture in poor condition. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class town of 800. Admission 15-25. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre (250 seats), Albany, Minnesota.

SPIRIT OF U. S. A. (8,312 feet). Star, Mary Carr. This is the best picture of the year. I received more favorable comments on this picture than any I have shown. Can't go wrong. Buying will make some real money. Hang the punch marks. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Farm and city class. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. Old but a good fire picture and well liked and drew a good business for one day. If you have not played it you can use as a good program. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (5,015 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. This is without question the best picture Thomson ever made. His new leading lady made a big hit with the audience. All the big stunts are approached in a logical manner making them seem all the more realistic. Of course Silver King, the famous trick horse, is there and over as usual. Stage coach scene in which Thomson was severely injured is almost too realistic for comfort. Hope Thomson was not permanently injured. One hundred per cent audience appeal. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.



First National

BOY OF MINE. (7 reels). Star, Benny Alexander. Certainly a good picture. Everybody well pleased. What more can I say. First National gives the best in my opinion. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, fine. Town of 2,440. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

ETERNAL CITY. (7,800 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. Barbara La Marr also starred in this picture which in every sense of the word could be called a "special." This picture has excellent direction and pleased one hundred per cent. The Italian citizens, as a rule, seldom patronize the movies but here's one that drew them and sent them out feeling proud of their "old country." Will appeal to all and is well worth playing anywhere. Fine scenes. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, very strong. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

IN EVERY WOMAN'S LIFE. (6,908 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. A good program with a bum title. I know it pleased all that came but that was only sixty-three adults. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Retired farmers town of 2,500. Admission 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

MARRIAGE CHEAT. (7 reels). Star cast. Fine picture. Everybody pleased. As usual First National gives us another good one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town of 2,440. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER IN HOLLYWOOD. (6,700 feet). Star, Alexander Carr. Good in every way; in fact, a scream all the way through. I would book all I could get of this quality. Tone good. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Retired farmers, town of 2,500. Admission 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

SECRETS. (8,345 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A "special" in price only. Not as good as some of her others, and I had to pay about three times as much. Never again for me. It is a good picture but by no means a special. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal good. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SON OF THE SAHARA. (8 reels). Star, Bert Lytell. A splendidly directed picture of a story that is none too effective. Cast excellent. Pleased eighty per cent. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TARNISH. (6,821 feet). Star, May McAvoy. A tip-top feature and I'll recommend it for any house in the U. S. They can't make too many of this quality. Tone good. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Retired farmers, town of 2,500. Admission 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

THOSE WHO DANCE. (7,500 feet). Star, Blanche Sweet. A real picture. Much better than some of these "specials." If your audience likes crook stories, give them this one. It will surely please them. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

TORMENT. (6 reels). Star cast. Good picture. First National always good and at right prices. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Town of 2,440. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

WHITE MOTH. (6,550 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Better than we expected. Pleased the majority and registered as a better than average picture. Tone okay. Sunday, doubtful. Good audience appeal. Better class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

It takes a little while for your letters to get to me, and then another while before they get into print.

That accounts for the fact that this week doesn't continue the discussion brought up in last week's department by friend Prescott, on the matter of mouth-to-mouth advertising and your experiences in getting something out of it.

Don't wait till you see what the other fellow says; come in with your ideas and your experience.

Another old friend, Fred S. Widenor, who has been sending tips for a long time, chats with you this week, and you'll enjoy his words because in them he embodies the spirit that has made Straight From the Shoulder the dependable tip department that it is today.

VAN.

Fox

ARIZONA EXPRESS. (6,516 feet). Star cast. This is a fast-action melodrama and will go big if your audience likes to see the impossible. Most of the jumping stunts, etc., can't be done but young people fell for it okay. Tone, none. Doubtful for Sunday. Special, maybe. Fair audience appeal. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

CIRCUS COWBOY. (6,400 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A very nice little picture. Liked by all Jones fans. Good for all houses that change every day. Cannot be run more than one day. Print good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy per cent. Factory class. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CUPID'S FIREMAN. (5,000 feet). Star, Charles Jones. This went over very good for a program picture and seemed to please the majority. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

DANCERS. Star, Madge Bellamy. A real good picture but not a super-special like they want you to believe. This picture is different to others and has some great sets and photography and will please most of the people. Tone good. Special, yes. Miners and railroad class, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

DARWIN WAS RIGHT. Star cast. Fox made a monkey of this exhibitor on this by giving us a padded monkey comedy as a feature. It did not get over. If you have not bought it, stay off. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

DEADWOOD COACH. Star, Tom Mix. This is about the best that Mix has ever made, and that is saying something. A good clean action picture and will be enjoyed by all. Tone good. Special, yes. Miners and railroad class, town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

HEARTS OF OAK. (5,326 feet). Star cast. Fox has spent a lot of money in advertising this picture. It did not draw for me and I do not call it a big picture. It's fair and where strong drama productions are popular this should appeal. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. W. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

LONE CHANCE. (4,231 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Gilbert at his best in this picture. A very good story, also supporting cast worthy of mention. Print good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal eighty per cent. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

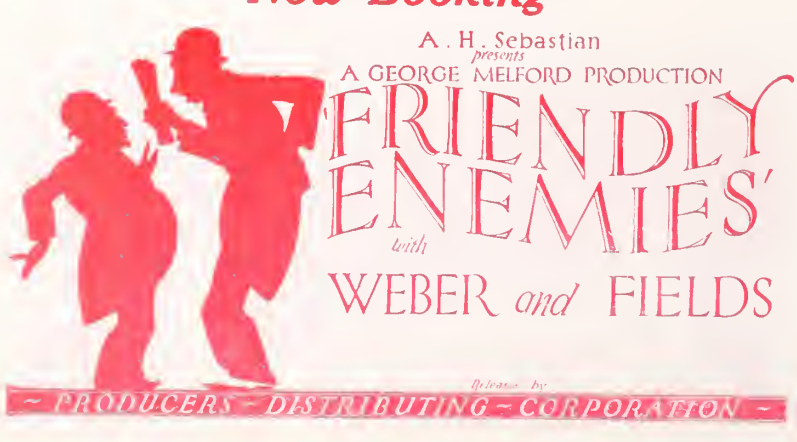
MAN WHO CAME BACK. (8,273 feet). Star, George O'Brien. One of the best melodramas we have had. Well done, well acted, well directed, and seemed to please. Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star, George O'Brien. Four days to good business despite heavy snow. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

SHADOW OF THE EAST. (5,874 feet). Star cast. Just so so. Not a big special but a fair picture that did a fair business. Last of the 1923-24 series. Fox pictures have been satisfactory for last year. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. W. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

SHEPHERD KING. (8,500 feet). Star cast. Very good picture of its type. Couple up with your church and you'll make money. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

SOUTH SEA LOVE. (4,168 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Just a fair little program picture and didn't seem to appeal to my audience although I consider it well acted and directed. Story falls short. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.



Fred. Widenor's Interesting Letter

"Dear Van and 'Gang': I wish to inform you that my criticism is as I see the picture and without regard to boosting features that in my estimation are below the standard and if I can help my brother exhibitor in boosting future bookings with them I am only too glad to send them along and try and help him along.

"The trouble with all features of today, looking at it from the small town exhibitor, they are not made for him, but go across in the big cities owing to the different types that they have to show them to. In a small town you have to cater to all and if the picture is too religious or too pious it does not go across with the common class, and if it is too wild and wooly it does not go with the church people, so an exhibitor in a small town is surely up against it to try and please every one when his drawing power is limited.

"I wish to take this opportunity of thanking you for the paper and must say that I enjoy reading it from cover to cover every week."—Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvedere, New Jersey.

Metro-Goldwyn

FASHION ROW. (7,300 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Will get by but will not please the majority. Mae Murray poses too much and the story is too long drawn out; should be about five reels instead of eight. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal poor. Miners and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

LITTLE ROBINSON CRUSOE. (6,216 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This picture would have been rotten if Jackie wasn't in it. There is really nothing to it but Jackie. Print just right. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy per cent. Factory class. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

NAME THE MAN. (8 reels). Star, Mae Busch. Although not a special, this is a very good picture and should please. The acting is very good and the story does not drag. A good program picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Average audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

RECOIL. (6,800 feet). Star, Betty Blythe. I class this as one of the best of its kind I ever played. The two stars do some fine work; supporting cast, however, not so good. It is a good story that holds interest to the last. Tone very good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal good. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

RED LIGHTS. (6,841 feet). Star cast. Very fine mystery story with plenty of thrills. Ray Griffith is especially good. Boost it as you can't miss it. Will please ninety per cent. Tone, none. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Fine audience appeal. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

RENDEZVOUS. (7 reels). Star, Conrad Nagel. A fairly good picture, crammed with action and thrills. I would class this as a good program picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

ROUGED LIPS. (5,150 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Just a fair offering that pleased about sixty-five per cent. Made a fair offering for Monday and Tuesday. Plot very light. Dana fair. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

THY NAME IS WOMAN. (9,087 feet). Star cast. Very good love story. Well done and pleased. Worthy of any show. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Paramount

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,770 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Good program picture. Sustains interest throughout. Tone okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Oil field class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

BEDROOM WINDOW. (4,550 feet). Star cast. Good crook story that did an ordinary business. Title against it. Paramount paper is very bad for me. Too much star and not enough scenes. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

BORDER LEGION. (7,908 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. Very good feature. Pleased one hundred per cent. Do not be afraid to recommend it to your patrons. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. One of the best of the Famous Forty. It's really clever. It will surely please. Tone good. Audience appeal good. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Everyone seemed to enjoy this feature as it was different from majority. Very well acted by a very able cast. Tone fair. Sunday ,yes. Special, no. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star, Betty Compson. With extra advertising it brought me a good business and pleased the majority. The smoking scenes and part of the picture are bad for small towns. No need of so much drinking and smoking. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star cast. Very good comedy drama that was well liked here. This is much better than the average program picture and should please the majority, especially the men. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. As with most all seven and eight reel features, the first part drags so it almost spoils the show. Last part okay. Tone fair. Possibly suitable for Sunday. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

HEART BUSTER. (4,500 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Not Tom's best, but at that it's good and got me the business and, so far as I know, pleased Mix following. Tone good. Fair audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This one is not up to her standard, set by her last three pictures, and the fact that it is a costume affair all goes to make it a poor one from the box-office. Tone fair. Special, yes. Fair audience appeal. Small town class, town of 600. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A corking sea story of the Maine coast. Good outdoor picture. played to good business in spite of rough weather. Fine reports from patrons. Good for any time, any place. General class, town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Here is a good bet if your people like Negri. Acting, cast, story all good. Brought fair business. Pola great emotional actress. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal eighty per cent. Town and country class, town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. A very good picture for large cities, but will not please the average audience in our small towns. Fair audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

LOCKED DOORS. (6,621 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Society, love, romance. Not so good as most of Betty's pictures. Von Eltz as hero spoils the feature. Too stiff and not pleasing. Many objections to his work. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Makes good entertainment and is worthy of pushing. Direction good. Characterization well done. Tone good. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Retired farmers, town of 2,500. Admission 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

MAN MUST LIVE. (6,116 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Dix is becoming very popular and pictures in which he stars usually please one hundred per cent. Everyone satisfied. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. One of her best. Everyone seemed to enjoy it and I received no kicks, so I guess it must have pleased. The action of Gloria is simply marvelous. Book it and boost it. It will stand it. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MAN WHO FIGHTS ALONE. (6,337 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. A very crude picture. Deals mostly with the birth of child, shows everything but the delivery. No moral tone. Sunday, no. Fair audience appeal. College class, town of 2,160. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (1,100 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Positively not a small town picture. I took a real trimming on this one. The picture is all right but these costume pictures are the bunk. No more of them for me. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Better than "The Covered Wagon" as entertainment but did not draw one-half as many patrons, but weather and local financial trouble prevented. Tone good. Sunday, yes. General class. Retired farmers, town of 2,500. Admission 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,671 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Absolutely rotten not one good foot in the whole feature. Pay them for it and keep it on the shelf, it will be the best thing that you can do for your patrons. I think that it's the worst that I ever sat through. A. Mitchell. Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,671 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Very light and really a flop at the box office although I have had few Paramount's that don't please. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. Town and country class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Without question one of the finest box office attractions of the year. Although this is a fantasy, it is nevertheless very interesting to grownups because of the acting. The work of Miss Bronson is nothing short of marvelous and I sincerely hope she will be among the front rank stars 'ere another year lapse. Of course Ernest Torrence is fine in the role of Captain Hook. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Suburban class town of 2,000. Admission 20-40. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

PETER PAN. (9,952 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. An elaborate fairy tale popular with the children and women but the men as a rule do not care for it. Some of them walked out. Rental asked for this was entirely too high for this small town. The slight profit realized is the answer. It is worth seeing anywhere but look out for the high rental. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. The story value is questionable, and it seems that the star might have at least expressed his resentment in some material way; nevertheless, the picture is good, and pleases the children especially. The children have to sit through a lot of dry unintelligible (to them) features and one like this don't do a bit of harm, occasionally. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Average appeal. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30. Admission 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

Says Bad Prints Help Radio

"Better prints are needed to compete with the radio," is the contention of Carlyle A. Anglemire, of the "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pa.

"Do you want to know why I say this?" he continues, in a letter meant to be noted by exhibitors and exchanges and sent to Moving Picture World to ensure this result. "Well, recently, a patron, after viewing one of our shows with three stops in it, two misframes and a print that was full of dirt, mentioned, upon going out, that he would better have 'stayed home with the radio.'

"Fellow exhibitors, and exchange managers, do you see the lesson in that sentence? There may be 'static' in the radio, but Mr. Radio Fan is not paying for it directly as he is for picture entertainment; but when there is what we might call 'static' in your show, in other words stops, due to poor splices, misframes and dirty prints and rain, why then—look out for the box office!

"I don't think there is a thing in the pictures that contributes more toward keeping people home, listening to their radios, than the interruptions due to stops, misframes, and so on.

"I claim my patrons are entitled to good prints; as good as they'd get in the New York Capitol; I get fifteen cents against their fifty-five; I sell the picture!—haven't a palace for a theatre, with symphony orchestra and prologues to offset the difference.

"The great appeal of motion pictures was that the small town could see the same pictures that the city saw. This appeal is being spoiled, due to the fact that the small town exhibitor is not getting good prints of the pictures.

"So—when my patron sees a show all cut up, rainy and badly spliced film—next time, he stays home and listens to the radio!"

PURPLE HIGHWAY. (6,574 feet). Star, Madge Kennedy. Where audiences are made up of people who can appreciate the good things in movies, especially a talented cast. This ought to give genuine satisfaction. This one is backed up by a story that one can take to heart, and the subtle comedy and novelty touches here and there make it agreeable entertainment. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. General appeal. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30, special, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

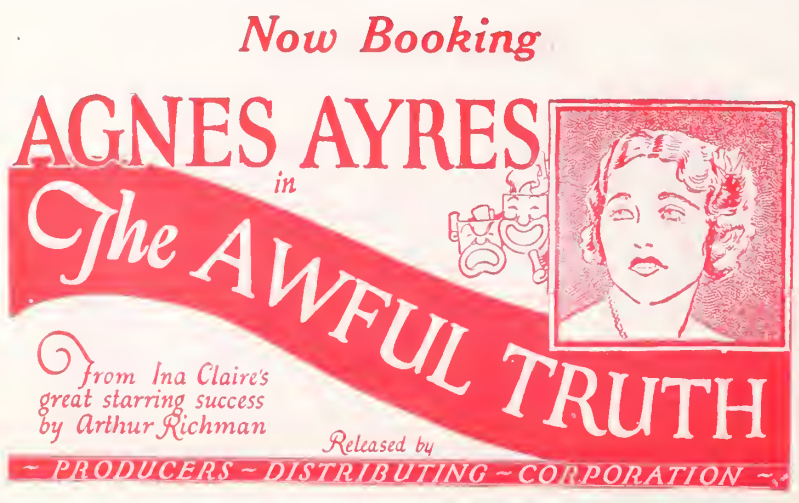
RACING HEARTS. Star, Agnes Ayres. They raved over this for a long time. A race of any kind suits us here. The crowds, thrills, and Agnes Ayres made it a fine program to watch and we can recommend it to any one to show. L. E. Smith, Town Hall, Pittsford, Vermont.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. In our opinion this feature is a cheater and any exhibitor in a small town will be disappointed if he runs it. Everyone felt that this feature was very weak. Valentino does not mean anything to our box office. Tone poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, does not have any. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House Theatre (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. This picture brought me an extraordinary business. I played this before "Beaucaire" because small towns do not like costume stuff. My audience was divided. Most of the women liked it. The men did not. It got the business and we are satisfied. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star cast. A crackerjack western story that everyone liked, in fact a western of any kind will go here. This is above the average for a good program. No mistake to play it. Paramount prints to us have always been very good. L. E. Smith, Town Hall, Pittsford, Vermont.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,881 feet). Star, Richard Dix. The bunk of a picture did poor business. Tone, none. Sunday, no. All classes town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gor-



It helps the fraternal spirit to see what we all look like.

There's a boy who shoots in the tips on mighty recent releases every chance he gets.

He looks like that sort of chap. Because he IS.

So, shift your optics over to the other side of the page and get acquainted with the physical presentment of a fellow who has been in the game more'n twenty years—and his mighty charming family.

Maybe you know him already—many do!. It's the boy the nation knows—"Merrily yours, Joe K." And that's Joe Koehler, of the Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

don, Star Theatre (450 seats), Weiser, Idaho.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Rental right on this one therefore have no fault to find. A good picture good entertainment value. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SIDE SHOW OF LIFE. (7,511 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. Pleased majority but the opinion was that Torrence was miscast and not the type for this class. However, it is good and will please. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

SINGER JIM McKEE. (7 reels). Star, Bill Hart. Lay off this one. No good. Hart has died a natural death. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal no good. Town of 2,440. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

SINGER JIM McKEE. (7 reels). Star, William Hart. Well, boys, I've read all your bad reports on this picture and I hesitated to run it. It may be as bad as you say it is, but let me say it brought home the bacon for me. I'll say that Bill did well and the people here like him very much. His support was poor, but at that I wish all of Paramount pictures were as good. I am not boosting the picture, but my patrons were satisfied and the second night was three times as large as the first. I hope Bill will make another one or two with a good director and cast to go with him. Bill, you made money for me. I can't say the same for some of the "good ones" that Paramount released. Town and rural class, town of 2,500 Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,881 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This one will please your movie fans as it was made for the audience. Hokum that the average person will eat up. You can buy this one right and it will please. Tone fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

SOCIETY SCANDAL. (6,433 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. The best picture we have seen Gloria in for some time. Pleased thoroughly for us. Where she is popular this will boost her prestige. Usual draw at box office. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. High audience appeal. Better class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SOCIETY SCANDAL. (6,433 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Did not see this personally but the reports on it were good, but did not do much business on account of extreme cold weather. Tone fair. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

SOCIETY SCANDAL. (6,433 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Another good one from Gloria. One of her best. Will please eighty per cent. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

SPANISH DANCER. (8,434 feet). Star, Pola Negri. The best picture Pola Negri ever made, to my judgment. Pleased everyone very much. Wallace Beery is good as usual. Tone good. Sunday, good. Extra good program picture. Did not draw. Neighborhood class. Admission 10-20. L. R. Markum, Tuxedo Theatre (500 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (12,000 feet). Star cast. Everyone pleased. Capacity business. Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

TONGUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Poor. If Meighan don't give us better pictures he will lose all the prestige he has. City of 10,000. Admission 10-25. Vine Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

TONGUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Usual Meighan picture; pleased his friends and does not offend the others. Just a good picture. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TO THE LADIES. (6,268 feet). Star cast. A very nice little comedy-drama. Will do for two days. Acting very good. Print good. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal seventy per cent. Factory class. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

TO THE LADIES. (6,268 feet). Star cast. Didn't seem to draw for us because of title and paper being poor, for small towns. Was a good picture and they all enjoy Theodore Roberts here. It's a real good program just the same for any small town to have. L. E. Smith, Town Hall, Pittsford, Vermont.

TRIUMPH. (8,297 feet). Star cast. A good picture. Not elaborate as usual. DeMille's are, but good story well told. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Not suitable for special here. Good audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

TRIUMPH. (8,297 feet). Star cast. This is a very good Cecil DeMille story that should please the average audience. The title is no drawing card and the posters on it are not the kind to draw any business, but the picture is good but not worth the price they ask. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal fair. Miners and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gloria's best to date here. No one need worry about over-boosting it. Benny Lyon did his bit fine. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Retired farmers, town of 2,500. Admission 10-20, 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

Here's "Joe K."

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Rental too high. Failed to draw. Only a slight profit left for me. Picture is all right had the rental been less. Did not draw like other Swanson pictures. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WORLDLY GOODS. (6,085 feet). Star cast. Story a little exaggerated but worth seeing. Does not spoil its entertainment value. Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Pathe

GIRL SHY. (7,457 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A seven-reel comedy. Harold keeps them smiling all the time. Lost money on this one. Didn't seem to draw the crowd, but a good picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes, town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Dexter, New York.

HOT WATER. (5,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. From a box office standpoint the best of his feature comedies. Tone good. City of 10,000. Admission 15-35. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

HOT WATER. (5,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. This picture is good but not to be compared with some of his former releases. Weather very cold and business light. Not the fault of the picture as Harold will get the business any time. Good tone, good appeal. Town and rural class, town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

CONSTANCE BENNETT
One of the featured players in Paramount's "Code of the West"

WHY WORRY? (6 reels). Star, Harold Lloyd. A good Lloyd as usual. However, not as good as his past few. Will please generally and get the money. Good exploitation possibilities in the title. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal one hundred per cent. Small town class, town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Preferred

ARE YOU A FAILURE? Star, Hoot Gibson. Good program picture worth seeing. Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MAYTIME. (7,500 feet). Star, Ethel Shannon. This picture failed to draw for us, but might be considered a fair program. Was sold for an extra picture but it is not. We all get panned once in a while. Buy it cheap or not at all. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. General class, town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

MAYTIME. Star cast. Good program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. box-office, good. Elite Theatre, Placerville, Calif.

TRIFLERS. (6,626 feet). Star cast. A weak sister. Just a program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Best classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Principal

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. (State Right). Star, Pat O'Malley. (7,800 feet). This is a very good western picture, wonderful photography and well directed. Played it Sunday and Monday and did very well at the box office. Go easy on price, though. Tone, none. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Fair audience appeal. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. (Principal Pictures). Star, Pat O'Malley. A Harold Bell Wright story that goes over big. Author's name and the character of the story gets them in. Believe it is a good big bet for any theatre. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

VIRGINIAN. (Grey story). (8,010 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. A high class western suitable for the highest class houses. It is an old picture but if you have not played it you will make no mistake in giving it a trial. The title draws like a mustard plaster. With the proper advertising you will get all the "Old Timers" to attend. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

ANOTHER SCANDAL. (8 reels). Star, Lois Wilson. This was a nice drawing picture and well produced. There is nothing bad about it. A good program and well liked by our patrons. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

CAFE IN CAIRO. (5,656 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. One of the best seen by Priscilla Dean. Pleased all who saw it. Middle and working class. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. City of 25,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

LEGEND OF HOLLYWOOD. (5,414 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. Absolutely the poorest excuse of a picture shown at my theatre during the year of 1924. It is tiresome, padded to the extreme and leading characters have no appeal whatever. About five reels are taken up showing leading man trying to drink a poisoned glass of wine. Some in the audience were making audible wishes that he would drink it quick and pass out. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, twenty-five per cent. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

LEGEND OF HOLLYWOOD. (5,414 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. Very slow program picture. Not enough action to please any audience. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, not much. Neighborhood class. Admission 10-20. L. R. Markum, Tuxedo Theatre (500 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

LOVE'S WHIRLPOOL. (6,028 feet). Star,

DOROTHY DEVORE
Snappy—scintillating, a Warner Brothers star

James Kirkwood. Ran this along with "Now or Never" and did good business. Attribute this to Lloyd. Patrons all well pleased with it and several remarked it was fine. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. W. G. Enloe, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

MIAMI. (6,317 feet). Star, Betty Compson. With the thermometer registering fifteen below, I showed this picture of the warm tropical regions and it went over in great shape. Betty Compson's work is excellent though there are a couple of technical flaws in the production, the director's fault. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent for high classes. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

MICHAEL O'HALLORAN. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Good. Pleased one hundred per cent. Book it and boost it. P. P. Groh, Peculiar Theatre, Peculiar, Missouri.

NOT ONE TO SPARE. (5 reels). Star cast. Very poor program picture. Will not get a cent for my house and will hardly please an audience. Not enough action. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Admission 10-20. L. R. Markum, Tuxedo Theatre (500 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

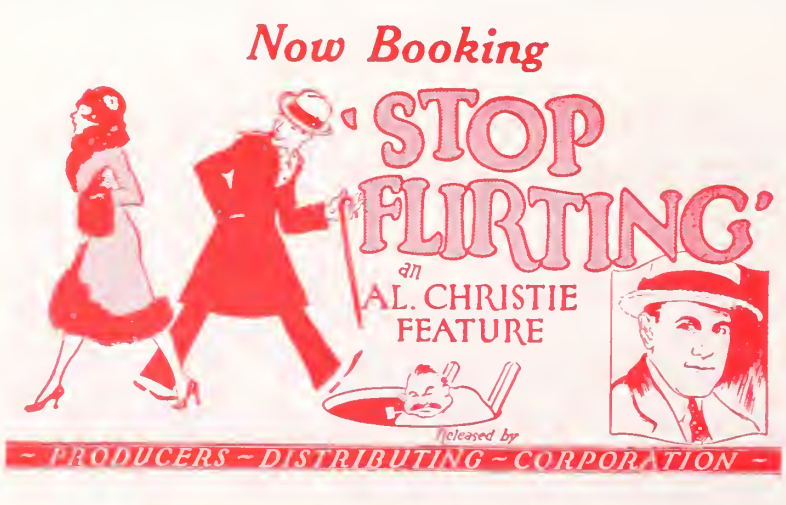
RAMSHACKLE HOUSE. (6,257 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A pleasing offering with some wonderful shots of the swamp regions of Florida. The alligator stuff is great. Story good. Acting excellent and settings best of all. Plenty of action for lovers of this class of stuff. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. for the masses. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

RAMSHACKLE HOUSE. (6,257 feet). Star cast. A mystery thriller, that held them quiet as a mouse. Failed at the box-office, however. Probably due to First National Radio party. Y. M. C. A., Carney's Point, New Jersey.

ROARING RAILS. (5,753 feet). Star cast. Picture very good. Draw a good crowd and everyone well pleased. Best Carey yet for us. Tak and Makousky, Opera House, Clarkson, Nebraska.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 feet). Star cast. Priscilla Dean. Excellent. A story dealing with the bull fighting arena. Lots of action and a little comedy. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, okay. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,651 feet). Star cast. Very good society drama of real life. Took very well here and drew a good house.



AILEEN PRINGLE
Fascinating in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Wife of the Centaur"

Seemed to please about seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Dexter, New York.

TIGER THOMSON. (5,700 feet). Star, Harry Carey. A very good western. Harry Carey liked here. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, good. Town of 2,440. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

WHILE PARIS SLEEPS. Star cast. Here is one that is a sure enough hunk of A-1 cheese. Booked it on account of Lon Chaney in cast and booker said it was good. Played it on Sunday and Monday and would have welcomed death to facing patrons. Just a blank. No story, no action, nothing. Pay for it if booked and don't play it. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Family class city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

WISE VIRGIN. (5,951 feet). Star cast. Rather bold in spots but at that one that will please a mid-week or Sunday crowd. Tone, pretty fair. Suitable for Sunday, here. Good audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

WISE VIRGIN. (5,981 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. A clever picture that made a real hit with a mid-week audience. Miss Miller was especially attractive in this one and the climax knocks them cold. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. for high class audiences. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

United Artists

AMERICA. (14,000 feet). All previous reports expresses my opinion of this production. To say it's wonderful is putting it mildly. Weather 40 below zero, so I did not make any money, but I am going to buy it back and run it again. Book it and boost it. Town and rural class town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

HILL BILLY. (5,734 feet). Star, Jack Pickford. Ordinary southern picture. It did not hold up here. Town and rural class town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10 reels). Star, Mary Pickford. A little late in showing this picture but it's one of the good ones. Fine scenery, good acting, by the entire cast, and Mary always packs the house. Pleased one hundred per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Dexter, New York.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10 reels). Star, Mary Pickford. Everyone was well pleased with "Tess" and it drew several people just to see Mary Pickford. She has made so few pictures for several years, lots of young people have never seen her. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Miners and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-30, for specials. John Russell, Russell Theatre (250 seats), Matherville, Illinois.

THIEF OF BAGDAD. (12,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. A wonderful production and a money maker if you can buy it right. Enjoyed by old and young and full of good clean comedy. Tone, good. Special, yes. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexxico.

WOMAN OF PARIS. Star, Edna Purviance. This was a big disappointment to me and to my patrons. Evidently made from Broadway, London and Paris. You small town boys lay off. Too much sex stuff. Settings and photography wonderful. Poor business. Town and rural class town of 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

Universal

ACQUITTAL. (6,325 feet). Star cast. Excellent entertainment. This picture will hold the interest of any audience from the first to last reel. Tone, good. Strong audience appeal. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

ACQUITTAL. (6,325 feet). Star cast. Here is one that will go anywhere and is good enough for the big houses. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (195 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

BIG TIMBER. (4,650 feet). Star, William Desmond. Desmond will soon be on the shelf if they don't put him in westerns. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, sixty-five per cent. City of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

BROADWAY OR BUST. (5,272 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Here is a real comedy drama that will please most any audience. Play it for Hoot is A-1. Himself in this one. A picture in six reels. Good shape for us. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

CHAPTER IN HER LIFE. (6,330 feet). Star cast. Not the type for present day audiences. Fell flat. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

DRIFTING. (7,394 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A good picture in seven reels. Good plot. Play, with good action in it, it will please most people. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Town and country class town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

FAST WORKER. (6,506 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Just a fair program picture. They will never make a big drawing card of this actor. He doesn't seem to have the appeal as many other male stars do. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Small town class town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (700 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

FIGHTING AMERICAN. (5,251 feet). Star, Pat O'Malley. What few saw this picture said it was great. Struck some bad weather and it did not draw, but if it had been clear weather I am sure it would have packed the house. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, yes. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

FLYING HOOFS. Star, Jack Hoxie. Just another Hoxie with not much of anything in it. Universal does not seem to put him in anything with action. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (195 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This is one of the big pictures of the year but can't compare with "America." Too long for a small theatre. Good picture. Pleased about sixty per cent. Lost money. Tone, good. Very good audience appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Dexter, New York.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This is a wonderful picture and should be played at all theatres that have not played it. If you can get it reasonable, play it. Tone, good. Special, yes. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. General class town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre (260 seats), Buena Vista, Virginia.

HURRICANE KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. Hoot Gibson liked here. Everyone used here has been very good. Give us more of them. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town of 2,440. Admission 15-25. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre (250 seats), Pass Christian, Mississippi.

Wisconsin—Why?

"Say, Van, you get reports from nearly every State in the Union.
"Why only one from Wisconsin?
"Would like to write more on this subject but time is limited—but think over this question above."—William Meeks, Murray Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

MERRY-GO-ROUND. (9,178 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. Good production but story pretty rough and brutal for a decent crowd. Tone, doubtful. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

SAWDUST TRAIL. (5,500 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Two days to very good business. Hoot is in better stories than formerly. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

SPORTING YOUTH. (6,712 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Rather old but pleasing picture. Some very good racing scenes. Print fair. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

TURMOIL. (7 reels). Star cast. Here's a real one. In fact I think the best Universal ever made. And why? Because a real story and very suitable cast. No $5,000 stars either. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fine audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

WESTERN WALLOP. (4,611 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Not much of a picture yet Jack draws fairly well for us. If he had real stories, and real direction he would be great as Jack is favored by the ladies. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

WESTERN WALLOP. (4,611 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Very poor western the Universal Hoxie's are nothing like his old ones. Where they got this name I do not know. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Vitagraph

BELOVED BRUTE. (6,719 feet). Star cast. One of the very highest class and best westerns shown at my theatre during the past twelve months. It is a western that is different and is suitable for the highest class houses. While there is an unlimited amount of action, it does not seem absurd on account of the gripping qualities of the story. Victor Maglen is great. The wrestling match is wonderful. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. for all classes. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

Warner Bros.

BABBITT. (8 reels). Star, Willard Louis. If your audience likes pictures with good acting but not much action, this one will please them. It drags a bit in the first couple reels, but after that it becomes very interesting. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Not suitable for special. Fair audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

LEATRICE JOY

DADDIES. (6,800 feet). Star, Mae Marsh. One of the very best comedy specials shown at my theatre during the past year. Suitable for children especially, and also adults of every class. Warner Brothers should be proud of this masterpiece. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre, Battle Creek, Iowa.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, JR. (6 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. A good picture. Many good laughs, as the colored comedian sure did the stuff. Barry sure good. Tak & Makousky, Opera House, Clarkson, Nebraska.

LOVER'S LANE. (6 reels). Star cast, Warner Brothers sure fell down bad on this one. Five reels of sadness. Pass it up. Tone, fair. Not Suitable for Sunday, here. Very little audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

THREE WOMEN. Star cast. Of its type, very good. Cast, production and direction all okay. Just a fair puller here. Tone, doubtful. Possibly suitable for Sunday. Fair audience appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

PRINTER'S DEVIL. (7 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. Excellent program picture in spite of some of the "pans" the boys gave it in this department. Pleased all who saw it and some liked it better than "George Washington, Jr." and "The Country Kid." Personally, thought it not so good as the other two. All of Warner's pictures, so far, have made good here. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Comedies

CAKE EATER. (Pathe). Star, Will Rogers. Boys, this is a scream from start to finish. Positively the best Rogers comedy we have ever shown. New print. Tone, very good. Sunday, yes. Great audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission, ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

FELIX CARTOON. (M. J. Winkler). These new Pat Sullivan cartoons are the very best that have been put out. If you want something that pleases one and all get them. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

GIANT KILLER. (State Right). Star, Dinky Doodle. This makes a good comedy. Liked, good here, second I have shown of these. Helps on these long features? Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Farm and city class. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

HIS FIRST CAR. (Educational). Star, Al St. John. Written and directed by Al St. John. Why doesn't Al let someone else write and direct. This is similar to other comedies we have shown, consequently the situations were hoary with age and no laughs were heard. St. John must do better than this if he intends to hold his following. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, none. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35, on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Serials

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Star, Edna Murphy. This is a good serial picture as money can buy. And prices are all right, so—buy it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (300 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

Short Subjects

FIGHTING BLOOD. (F. B. O.) Star cast. Running a series of these pictures which seem to take very well so far and pleases our patrons. I think as good as a comedy. They are fine. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Very good audience appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. A. E. Rogers, Dexter Theatre, New York.

Independents

BATTLING BUCKAROO. (Anchor). Star, Bill Patton. As good as the average western picture. Pleased a Saturday attendance. Print fair. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

BATTLING BUDDY. (State Right). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. Another rip roaring western with lots of comedy which pleased a capacity attendance on Saturday. Print new. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

EARLY BIRD. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. One of the best comedy pictures ever made and had the audience in a roar from start to finish. It is as good as any Lloyd and will not cost half the price. Miners and railroad class town of 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

PATHE NEWS 10. (Pathe). A very good and consistent News. Good with my patrons at all times. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

PATHE SPORTLIGHTS. (Pathe). A side partner to the Pathe Review and a darn good filler for any program so book 'em boys. Prints always good. Sunday, yes. Very good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

Harry Langdon, Sennett's "Find," Widely Hailed by Critics as a Leading Funmaker

PROBABLY no other comedian in the history of motion pictures has gained such widespread recognition in a brief space of time as has been accorded Harry Langdon, the Mack Sennett comedian.

Langdon has been in pictures slightly over one year, and already the leading publications, both in and out of the industry, are proclaiming him the comedy "find" of the decade.

Under the heading of "Watch This Boy," Wid's Weekly, in their issue of December 6th, states:

"A good comedy star to-day is really a better business proposition than a star of the regular hero or 'shero' type. Mack Sennett has a boy coming along that is going to make all of the brothers sit up and take notice in the years to come. If you have seen any of Harry Langdon's pictures lately you have surely been impressed by the manner in which that boy puts his stuff over.

"Of course comedies, figured basically, rest heavily upon the matter of gags and production. Nevertheless, when it comes to stepping into big money for comedy effort, it is necessary to have a personality to center the activity around, and when one of these personalities comes along it is a chance to walk into the feature field and clean up the big dough. Harry Langdon is about right for big feature comedy successes.

"I haven't been on the Sennett lot in a long time. It is a little off the beaten track, and for that reason I haven't talked with Mack for a good many days. I don't know what his plans are. I don't know what sort of a contract Langdon has with him. I have never met the boy. I do know that he has something which is of tremendous importance in putting across comedies. His stuff has earned laughs regularly, not only because of the gags, which have been good, but because of the manner in which he handles those gags.

"I have seen several of Langdon's short comedies in recent months, and they have all been very good. The other night I caught a thing ('All Night Long') in which he and Vernon Dent checked back to their hectic days on the battlefield, and the Mack Sennett crowd certainly deserve credit for having filled that one full of a wonderful lot of surefire gags.

"I don't know how soon they are going to slip Harry Langdon into a real big comedy feature clean-up, but the boy is just about right for it."

In an editorial appearing in the December 19th issue of "The Film Mercury," under the caption, "The Greatest Comedian On the Screen To-day," Harry Langdon is singled out of a group of five possible claimants as the candidate most deserving of that honor. The editorial, after discussing the relative merits of such outstanding stars of the comedy field as Chaplin, Lloyd, Keaton and Seamon refers as follows to Langdon:

"There is one on the screen to-day that comedy may well be proud of. He is a newcomer. If there was ever any actor or actress on the motion-picture screen who could bring forth gales of delirious laughter by his or her mere appearance, this is the one. The writer has many a time sat through a draggy, sloppy feature to enjoy a few minutes of this comedian's antics afterward.

"This maharajah of mirth, who has almost been overlooked in the mad scramble by highbrow critics to establish a great comedy king in one of the four others we have mentioned, in our belief—and we base our opinion upon his consistency in delivering the goods—'the greatest comedian on the screen to-day' is Harry Langdon."

The following are other editorial comments made by various publications on Harry Langdon and his work on the screen:

Tamar Lane, in "Motion Picture Magazine":

"It is only at very rare intervals that a really fine comedian arrives on the screen. Of mediocre buffoons we have always had large numbers, but from the very inception of the silent drama there has been but a scant dozen of funmakers whose work has been marked by any appreciable degree of originality and superior talent.

"The trouble with our comedians has been that to produce their fun they have found it necessary to depend on objects external and independent of themselves. Their humor has not come from 'within,' but is effected only with the aid of outside props and gags. Even some of our best comedians of to-day, such as Lloyd and Keaton, are somewhat marred by this failing. After all, in the films of our present-day clowns, it is the situation they are placed in that we laugh at, and not the comedian's own facial expressions and reactions to the scene. This denotes a grave shortcoming in the abilities of our funmakers.

"The notable exception to this is Charlie Chaplin, who produces his humor, not from what he does, but from the manner in which he does it. There are three or four other comedians, such as Lloyd Hamilton and Douglas MacLean, who to a certain degree are able to produce humor from within themselves. Of the latter-mentioned player I am going to have more to say in a later issue.

"And now we come to Harry Langdon.

"This newcomer to the screen, in the few films in which he has appeared, gives every evidence of being the finest and most whimsical comedian that has flashed on the silver sheet since the arrival of Chaplin. He is droll, he is pathetic, and he has a most original and distinctive style of expression. But most important of all, the great percentage of his humor comes from within.

"I do not say that Langdon has shown any brilliance to date, but he does appear to have tremendous potentialities and, with proper handling, should quickly establish himself as one of the most popular comedians of the day."

Kenneth Taylor, in the Los Angeles "Times":

"It's getting to be hard to find feature pictures that will rank in interest above the comedies Harry Langdon is appearing in these days. 'The First Hundred Years,' the Sennett comedian's latest, is no exception. See it yourself at the Metropolitan, if you have any doubts. It will cure them.

"Langdon can get over more comedy with one small motion of an eyebrow than some comedians can with a whole outfit of gags. And his comedies have gags in them, too, and fresh ones at that. Add to these a plausible story (some comedy stories are) and titles by J. H. Waldron, each of which contains a little kick of its own, and you have something that is vastly entertaining and successfully mirthful."

T. O. Service, in "Exhibitors' Herald":

"If you get a chance, look at Harry Langdon in 'The Cat's Meow,' Pathe's Mack Sennett comedy. Don't try to figure out whether Langdon suggests Chaplin or Keaton—just look at the picture and laugh. There's real comedy in this, and most of it is the kind of comedy that isn't funny unless a comedian does it. Langdon, whose comic genius I have suspected for some time, removes all doubt in this case."

HARRY LANGDON
As he appears outside of the studio.

A wagon load of spuds, I vow;
A rusty knife, a yawning pail, and thou
Awaiting in the distance—
Oh, army life weren't Paradise enow.

Metropolitan Reviewers in Ecstasies Over "Lost World"

NEW YORK obtained its first glimpse of "The Lost World" last Sunday night at the Astor Theatre, six days after the world premiere of the film at the Tremont Temple Theatre, Boston, New York capitulated as completely to the adventurous glamour and dramatic intensity of this photoplay, as did Boston.

The brilliancy and sensationalism of "The Lost World" are now fully established. This production, after its reception in the two cities named, is certain to achieve one of the biggest successes in the history of motion pictures.

The prologue, staged by Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand Theatre, was a striking affair, wholly in keeping with the sequences of the film devoted to the prehistoric monsters of early creation. The curtain rose on a stage across which clouds floated. Gradually a world appeared, dimly at first, and then increasing in brightness. After a time the picture of the world faded and a strong light appeared, under which stood a man who sang "I Never Knew Love Till I Met You" in keeping with the love interest which runs through the picture. At the conclusion of the song the world appeared again, dimming out till the picture was flashed on the screen.

The musical score, arranged by Carl Edouarde, of the Mark Strand and played by a large orchestra, formed an integral part of the entertainment and was received with many marks of approval by the capacity audience which saw the first performance.

"Stupendous"—"Marvelous"

"'The Lost World revealed itself as a truly great endeavor," wrote George Gerhard in the "Evening World." "This picture is an entirely new departure in the cinema art. It is a marvel of ingenuity, bringing to the screen, as it does, gigantic prehistoric animals, extinct for millions of years, in such manner that the spectator absolutely lives the story from beginning to end. How the animals were made to appear so lifelike is an absolute mystery. No words short of 'stupendous' and 'marvelous' will measure up to a description of some of its scenes. The cast is one of the best appearing on Broadway in many a month."

Rose Pelswick, in the "Journal," wrote: "Enough to make anyone vote for prohibition. Strong men clutched their escort's hands, as the pterodactyl flapped its wings and took a bow. Weak women shrieked at the sight of the unpronounceable dinosaurs. You'll get a great kick out of the picture—it's entertaining and imaginatively produced."

Mordaunt Hall, in the "Times": "Through wonderful photographic skill and infinite patience in the camera work, 'The Lost World' makes a memorable motion picture. A unique production which will cause a lot of talk, as some of the scenes are as awesome as anything that has ever been shown in shadow form. It also has been fashioned with keen sense for comedy relief."

Harriette Underhill, in the "Herald Tribune": "A fascinating picture. It is all terribly convincing. It baffles us."

The "Sun": "The very last word in 'jungle' pictures. Was received enthusiastically by the first-night crowd. Frankly, it is the best 'stunt' picture we ever saw. Really, you should not take a drink of liquor before seeing 'The Lost World,' or you may have a fit in the theatre! 'The Lost World' is 'trick' photography done wisely and cleverly. And it is never dull. An entertainment that is decidedly worth a trip."

Regina Cannon, in the "Evening Graphic": "'The Lost World' opened to an audience that sat in breathless suspense. The picture is most extraordinary. After that it is also stupendous, original and—and—but what's the use trying? Words are inadequate to describe just how breath-taking is this miracle of photography. The thing that makes 'The Lost World' the most unusual bit of photoplay ever imagined is the marvelous photography. This must be seen to be appreciated. See 'The Lost World' and get the thrill of a lifetime."

The "Evening Post": "Is amazing entertainment for boys of any age. The scenes showing these (prehistoric) monsters are marvelous in their ingenuity, and are so realistic that it is hard to believe that they do not live, breathe, fight and waddle destructively through the streets of London. There are thrills, comedy, horrors, a love story, and—well, 'The Lost World' has just about everything. If there's any of the boy in you, you'll have an evening of fine and instructive entertainment at this film. It's a great piece of work."

"Pete" Milne Capitulates

Peter Milne, veteran reviewer: "The most marvelous film of all time. The scenes are amazing to the point where they become magical in their effect. . . . There is romance, splendid characterization and superb comedy. Too much cannot be said in behalf of the cast. All concerned in the production of the picture have scored a triumph. It appears as if the Astor Theatre would be devoted to pictures—or rather to one picture—for many months to come."

The world's premiere of "The Lost World" took place in Boston on Monday night, February 2d, at the Tremont Temple Theatre, to turn-away business, as set forth in "Moving Picture World," issued February 14th, in detail. It will begin a run of indefinite length at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, on March 23d. It will show at increased admissions there, as it is doing in Boston and New York.

Statement By Eschmann

"In all of my experience in the distribution of motion pictures I have never seen such tremendous advance interest in a coming release as exhibitors throughout the country have shown in the instance of 'The Lost World,'" said E. A. Eschmann, whose staff of "special" salesmen, headed by A. W. Smith, Jr., is handling the picture. "We have been telling them for six months and more that this picture was going to be the greatest novelty the screen has ever seen. And they knew from past experience, with such productions as 'The Sea Hawk,' 'Abraham Lincoln,' 'Secrets' and 'The Lady,' that when First National made such statements it had the goods to deliver.

"On its sensational novelty alone, 'The Lost World' should be one of the biggest money-makers the industry has known. But it has many other things in its favor—high quality, brilliant direction and photography and acting of the highest order. In my estimation, 'The Lost World' will be one of the fastest and biggest booking pictures that the country has known."

SIGNED BY WARNER BROS. FOR LONG TERMS

Will Play Them Again!

Col. Willard Patterson, of the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, when in New York last week, signed an agreement by which he will take back to the Metropolitan Theatre the six most successful First National pictures which he has played. They will be played within a week at the rate of one a day, and Colonel Patterson expects the week to be one of the very biggest in the history of the Metropolitan.

Phil Rosen Signs

Will Continue To Direct Barbara La Marr For Sawyer-Lubin

Arthur H. Sawyer has signed Phil Rosen to a long-term contract whereby the latter will direct Barbara La Marr in her coming screen vehicles.

The signing of this contract is a result of the excellent work done by Mr. Rosen in directing "Heart Of a Temptress," the recently completed film starring Barbara La Marr, as the second of a series of pictures which Sawyer-Lubin are producing for First National.

Mr. Rosen stamped himself as one of the best of screen directors by his handling of the "Abraham Lincoln" production, hailed by critics and public as one of the finest films ever made.

Phil Rosen began his studio career as a cameraman in the old days of the Edison Company, and was responsible for the filming of "The Miracle Man."

Working on Hines Film Here

The Jackson Studio in the Bronx is humming with activity on "The Cracker Jack," Johnny Hines' latest feature for East Coast Films Inc. Production at the New York studio has been in full swing for a little over a week when Johnny Hines, Sigrid Holmquist, J. Barney Sherry, Bradley Barker, and Horace Haines returned after five weeks of consistent exterior filming at Miami, Fla. It is expected by C. C. Burr that the next three weeks will witness completion of the interiors with release of "The Cracker Jack" slated for March 15.

Editing "A Fighting Chance"

Davis Distributing Division, Inc., is in receipt of a wire from the Fleming Studios at Beaverton, Ore., that the fifth of the Al Ferguson series, "A Fighting Chance," has been finished and is now in the cutting-room. The "rushes" indicate that this is the most forceful feature in which the virile Ferguson has so far appeared and will unquestionably add to his already large following.

Rowland Announces Another Big Million Dollar Special

ANOTHER million-dollar thriller, a sequel to Conan Doyle's "The Lost World" which is now amazing New York and Boston, will be made by First National, it was disclosed recently by General Manager Richard A. Rowland, prior to his departure for Hollywood.

The picture will be made under the supervision of Earl Hudson, for the most part with the same technical and research organization which made "The Lost World."

Rowland declared that the test premieres of "The Lost World" in the two important cities during the past week prove conclusively the public's approval of this new and startling type of picture.

"The new picture is already under way; in fact, it has been in preparation for the past two months," said Rowland. "It will be even more fantastic and stirring than the Conan Doyle novel, difficult as that is to conceive. It will have, moreover, the same foundation of scientific procedure in the working out of the plot.

"The new story will be built around the mythical submerged continent of Atlantis, which some scientists declare to have existed in fact and to have been buried not by the wrath of pagan goods as suggested by Plato, but in the great flood of Scripture."

While on the Coast, Rowland will arrange the transportation to New York of the technical apparatus and technical experts involved in the production of "The Lost World." The new picture will be made, according to the plans of Rowland, in New York and the Azores.

"Work on the new picture was started in Hollywood before the completion of the current picture and prior to the removal of the First National units to New York," said Rowland.

"Willis O'Brien and Ralph Hammeras, technical experts, were doing research work during the last two months of the year in which they were superintending the technical processes of 'The Lost World.' They are now in New York at work on the new picture. Milton Menasco, who was art director of 'The Lost World,' and Roy Carpenter, of the camera crew, are also here. Virtually all the experts engaged in the dinosaur drama have been retained.

"'The Lost World' has unearthed a new field of drama for the motion picture which is impossible to any other field of drama. The secret developed by Willis O'Brien, after seven years of experiment, has made possible the visualization of the most extreme flights of imagination of our great authors.

"The story of Atlantis is the story of another 'lost world'—a world which mothered fierce supermen who ravaged and conquered the nations about them.

"To relieve the world of their menace, the gods, say the myths, sent an earthquake, and Atlantis settled beneath the sea. Science, however, knows that the fabled spot is shallow, and some men of erudition are inclined to believe it is the ground over which Noah floated his ark.

"Another theory of science we will bring into use is the belief that in the depths of the sea are monsters and marine life the eye of man has never seen. With the experience gained through our labors with 'The Lost World' there is every reason to believe the Atlantis story will be even better."

Arrow Representatives Home

Will Discuss With Dr. Shallenberger Plan to Distribute Productions in Europe

Nearly six months ago Isaac D. Miller and Harry Halpern, acting as exclusive agents for Arrow Pictures Corporation, left the United States to make an extended survey of general distribution conditions in Central European territory, and at the same time to establish headquarters at Vienna and Prague.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, had inaugurated a new policy for handling pictures in foreign markets, based on the idea it was fundamentally impossible to intelligently dispose of product in countries other than the United States, from a New York office.

Dr. Shallenberger was convinced that there should be a direct representative of his organization in each foreign territory; someone who could thoroughly analyze conditions and determine the fair price to charge that would return an equitable profit to all the factors interested.

Mr. Miller and Mr. Halpern returned to New York recently to discuss with Dr. Shallenberger the results of their investigations and to outline a general campaign for the distribution of Arrow product in Central Europe.

They are planning to return to Vienna about February 15, at which time they will be fully equipped to quickly dispose of all available Arrow productions, and, at the same time, to lay the foundation for a lucrative and continued market for the future output of this organization.

"Forbidden Cargo" Completed

Final scenes for Evelyn Brent's fourth Gothic production for Film Booking Offices were filmed last week by Director Tom Buckingham at San Pedro, California, where several of the U. S. Navy's swiftest destroyers were used. The story depicts the adventures of a young woman who is captain of a rum-running craft in the South Atlantic Ocean with a base at the Bahama Islands. The production has been titled "Forbidden Cargo" and is from the pen of Fred Kennedy Myton.

Additions to Warner Bros. List of Screen Celebrities

WARNER BROS. announce the addition of three important persons to their staff this week after signing contracts securing the services of Kenneth Harlan, star of many screen successes; Bess Meredyth, noted scenario writer, and Huntly Gordon, well known leading man. Negotiations are also pending with several other screen luminaries, but despite reports printed in the daily newspapers, these three are the only persons who have been signed at the present time.

In joining Warner Bros. Kenneth Harlan becomes a member of the producing company in which Marie Prevost, his wife, is a bright star. But there is no indication that they will play together. Mr. Harlan is just completing an engagement with Famous-Players, and for years appeared in such well known successes as "The Virginian," "The Beautiful and Damned" and "The Little Church Around the Corner." Warner Bros. believe he will be a big addition to their stock company and are making plans to have him appeare in several of their best stories.

Mr. Harlan first appeared in amateur performances and made his professional debut with the Gertrude Hoffman Revue, later securing an engagement with Robert Hillard's "The Fortune Hunters." His first screen engagement was through Lois Weber and afterward he was leading man to Constance Talmadge in several of her biggest successes.

Miss Meredyth, former scenarist for Fred Niblo, who has just returned from Rome, where she was preparing the script for "Ben Hur," signed a long-term contract under the conditions of which she will devote her time entirely to the preparation of pictures for Warners. Her first story will be assigned within the next week.

She is recognized in the industry as one of the foremost scenarists, retaining in her adaptations the salient features and factors of the original story without losing any of its "high spots" for the picturization.

Miss Meredyth has to her credit such successes as "The Red Lily," "Thy Name is Women" and "Ben Hur."

She is at the present time completing the scenario for "Nothing to Wear," which Hobart Henley will make for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Warner Bros. have put Huntley Gordon under a long-term contract, and added him to their stock company at the Hollywood studio. He has just finished playing the lead opposite Irene Rich in "My Wife and I" directed by Millard Webb.

Mr. Gordon is a Canadian actor, who first appeared before the footlights as an amateur, and made his professional debut in William Brady's production of "Life." His entrance into pictures was made via the Vitagraph Company, and he has appeared in big productions of that company, Ince and Metro.

He is a great favorite on the west coast and is looked upon as a forceful actor who can always be depended upon to put over a part.

"My Baby Doll" Released

"My Baby Doll" a two reel Century Comedy starring Edna Marian was released this week through Universal exchanges. It is the second of the series of twelve two-reelers to be made with Edna Marian in 1925. The first was "Her Daily Dozen." In her support, Miss Marian had Arthur Lake, Larry Richardson and "Cuddles" Shirley.

"The World's Official Sweetheart" will shortly be seen in "Little Annie Rooney," a United Artists' picture.

Hogan Completes Work

His Directorial Activity on "Mansion of Aching Hearts" Ends

James P. Hogan finished camera work this week in his second B. P. Schulberg production, "The Mansion of Aching Hearts" which features Ethel Clayton, Cullen Landis, Barbara Bedford, Sam de Grasse, Priscilla Bonner, Philo McCollough, Edward Gribbon and Eddie Phillips.

Many spectacular storm effects will be a production feature of this film which has as its background a fishing village on the coast of Maine. The story, written by Mr. Hogan, was suggested by the celebrated ballad of the same name by Harry Von Tilzer and Arthur J. Lamb. The fact that over a million copies of the song were sold since its publication, gives exploitation value to the film.

Director Hogan is supervising the cutting of the picture and when finished he will begin at once his next Schulberg release which will by "My Lady's Lips" of which John Goodrich is author.

Two Warner Stars Ill

Warner Bros. have been running short of leading women for the last few days, with Irene Rich and Marie Prevost both ill and under the doctor's care.

Miss Rich is suffering a severe attack of bronchitis and, according to her physician, will not be able to report at the studio for at least another week.

Miss Prevost contracted a bad cold in jumping to the climate extremes on her recent trip to New York and return.

Flora Finch With Chadwick

Flora Finch, one of the most popular character players of the screen, has been added to the cast of "The Midnight Girl," Lila Lee's latest vehicle, which will be released as the sixth of the famous Chadwick Nine. Miss Finch's role is typical of the eccentric character parts for which she is noted, and it is said to provide this comedienne an unusual opportunity to display her varied talents.

Mary Pickford Wins

"The World's Sweetheart" Borrows Director Wm. Baudine From Warner Bros.

Over the long distance telephone this week, H. M. Warner, who is now in New York, gave permission to William Beaudine, the director whom they have just placed under a long-term contract, to go over to the Pickford-Fairbanks studio and make one picture for Miss Pickford, which will be called "Little Annie Rooney."

It seems that when Beaudine was prop boy for the old Biograph and Mary was working for the same concern, they became friends, and following Beaudine's success with Warner Bros., she asked that he be loaned for her next production.

Beaudine is now working on "How Baxter Butted In," his first picture under the new Warner Bros. contract, taken from the American Magazine story "Stuff of Heroes." The principals are Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore who scored so heavily in "The Narrow Street." The director will go over to the Pickford studio as soon as he has finished his present story.

New Studio Buildings

Big Extension Project Under Way at Universal City

Construction work has started on $45,000 worth of improvements, the first step in the coming season's schedule of extensions at Universal City, which involves the erection of five or six new permanent buildings and other important additions to the big studio.

The construction is under the supervision of Julius Bernheim, general manager of the studio, and Norman Sprowl, business manager and Bernheim's chief lieutenant on construction work on the following new buildings:

Two technical stages, each large enough to accommodate sets depicting the deck of an entire battleship. (These are stages that are rocked by hydraulic rams, giving the effect of a ship on the water).

New wardrobe building, estimated at $10,000.

New garage and machine shop for transportation department. estimated at $10,000.

New library building, estimated at $5,000.

New stage, 150 by 300 feet in area, the largest single stage in the history of the industry. No cost estimate.

These new structures, according to Bernheim, were made necessary through the new $5,000,000 production schedule, which will require elaborate facilities for spectacles.

Every new building will be a permanent one, according to Bernheim, and will be utilized for years to come.

Changes in Management

Following the new alignment of branch offices effecting Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Columbus, so that these offices are now in one district, Harry W. Dodge, formerly Paramount branch manager at Columbus has been appointed manager of this new district. This, according to George W. Weeks, divisional sales manager, takes effect immediately. Edwin Brauer, formerly Cleveland salesman will manage the Paramount Columbus branch.

C. C. Wallace, formerly district manager of Chicago has resigned from the Paramount sales department.

Piccadilly Premiere

The St. Regis Picture, "Bad Company," Opens March 7

"Bad Company," first of the series of St. Regis Pictures, released by Associated Exhibitors, will have its world's premier presentation at the Piccadilly Theatre, New York. The date of the showing has been set for March 7th and plans are under way for a pretentious exploitation campaign in connection with this showing. Arthur Hoerl, of the St. Regis corporation, is co-operating with the management of the theatre in a four-weeks' campaign in Greater New York for this presentation.

Conway Tearle and Madge Kennedy are the stars in "Bad Company," with Lucille Lee Stewart, Charles Emmett Mack and Bigelow Cooper in the supporting cast.

Miss Kennedy is at present appearing in one of the big New York stage successes "Badges" and efforts are being made to have her appear at the theatre on matinees.

Goulding Signed by Metro

Alf Goulding, who directed "Excuse Me," Rupert Hughes' Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production which has taken its place as one of the biggest comedy hits of the year, has just affixed a signature to a long-term contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Goulding will direct Rupert Hughes' next production of "A Girl's Rebellion" from Hughes' own popular story, and is already assembling his cast as production is scheduled to start immediately upon Rupert Hughes' return to the coast.

"Sea Hawk" in New Orleans

First National's "Sea Hawk" was the second picture in the history of the Strand Theatre, New Orleans, that has played at increased admission prices. It is interesting to know that not only did the Saenger Amusement Company play "The Sea Hawk" at increased prices, but they held it over for an additional week, which is a rare occurrence in New Orleans, if necessary.

"Speed," Banner Production, Described as a "Thriller"

MESSRS. Davis and Briskin of Banner Productions, Inc., announce the completion of the sixth production on their independent schedule of eight, and the arrival of the print in New York City from the West Coast where it was made by Director Ed. LeSaint. The title of the production is "Speed," from the story of the same name which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The author is Grace Sartwell Mason. The picture has an all-star cast, consisting of Betty Blythe, Pauline Garon, Robert Ellis, William V. Mong, Arthur Rankin and Eddie Phillips. It is a Ben Verschieser production.

The Banner people consider this the best picture made by them thus far on their schedule. It is a snappy, fast moving production, filled with excitement from beginning t oend, and there is never a dull moment in it. The great thrill is in the automobile race, where three wildly careening cars go crashing down a mountainous road barely wide enough for two vehicles.

In the midst of grinding brakes and whirling dust and skidding cars, Robert Ellis, from a place on the running board of his car, sweeps alongside the bandit car and grabs Pauline Garon from her perilous position and drags her into his car. The escaping motor goes tumbling down into the ravine. Those who have seen the picture say this particular scene is as daring a piece of work as has ever before been seen on the screen. It is unusually well directed. The picture will be released March 1st.

There is an interesting story connected with "Speed" that is not generally known. It seems that the Banner people had arranged for the purchase of "Speed" before it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The story was duly printed, whereupon the representatives of one of the largest producing companies made an effort to purchase it, because of its tremendous dramatic value for the screen.

They were eventually referred to the executives of Banner Productions to whom they made an offer greatly in excess of the price the Banner people had paid for it. The story was not for sale, however, as Banner executives were as well aware of its unusual value as were the bidders.

Adds to "Winds of Chance"

Frank Lloyd has added Claude Gillingwater and John T. Murray to the cast of the special which he will make for First National from Rex Beach's novel, "Winds of Chance."

Universal to Distribute Ufa Film, "The Last Laugh"

THE Universal Pictures Corporation has purchased the American distribution rights for "The Last Laugh, A Page From Life" the long heralded Ufa picture that has received so much favorable comment in this country already. It will be released as a Special in all Universal exchanges in the United States and Canada as soon as it has completed its current runs at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, New York City. The picture is being shown at these theatres this week and next. When first shown in New York several weeks ago it was entitled "The Last Man," and later "The Least of Men."

Universal executives gave much thought to the selection of a proper box-office name for the picture. "The Last Laugh" was chosen because it combines excellent exploitation and advertising possibilities, while at the same time being one that fits the story completely.

"The Last Laugh" stars Emil Jannings, who is well known and highly thought of by American theatre goers, who remember his good work in "Passion," "Deception," and other Lubitsch films. He also well be seen in "Quo Vadis," an Italian film soon to be released in this country.

In "The Last Laugh" Jannings plays what trade paper critics assert is his finest role. He takes the part of a pompous and aged hotel doorman, in full regimentals. His descent from the heights of pride after his job and his uniform are taken away and he is assigned to duty as the hotel lavatory attendant makes a strong and dramatic story.

To Resume Work on "Chronicles"

According to advices from the offices of the Yale University Press, camera work will likely be resumed on the "Chronicles of America" series early in Spring. There are to be thirty-three subjects in all in this group of historical dramas, produced by Yale University Press and distributed by Pathe. After completion of the fifteenth production last Fall actual camera work was abandoned for the purpose of permitting the research departments and continuity staffs, engaged in preparing these subjects for filming, to assemble the necessary data and compile scripts for the remaining numbers of the series.

It is now announced that the continuities for six additional "Chronicles" have been completed and that the scripts for several other subjects have already been advanced well toward completion.

"Charley's Aunt" Scores Hit In Simultaneous Premieres

LIKE a gem of classical literature or music that lives on through the centuries, the popularity of Brandon Thomas's famous farce, "Charley's Aunt," seems destined to last forever. This comedy created a furore when first presented, more than thirty-three years ago, and established the long run record that still stands. It has been presented on the speaking stages of every civilized country almost continuously for the last third of a century, and now, judged by the public reception it received on its premiere in New York City, at the Colony Theatre, in Chicago at The Orpheum and in Los Angeles at the Million Dollar Theatre, the screen version of "Charley's Aunt" will carry on and amplify its record-breaking stage triumphs.

The premiere presentation at The Colony in New York, last Sunday, surpassed the fondest expectations of the Christie brothers, the executives of Producers' Distributing Corporation and the theatre management. From two o'clock in the afternoon until nine at night the line at the box office remained unbroken, while inside the audience proclaimed the production a huge success by almost continuous roars of laughter.

The New York newspaper critics, reflecting the public's approval, were lavish in their praise of the production and their critical opinions are indicated in the following excerpts:

"Syd Chaplin as 'Charley's Aunt' at the Colony Theatre is a riot. . . . In this role he is perfect."—Evening Journal.

"There was a chorus of merriment and I found myself joining in the chorus. . . . I can truthfully say it is up to the minute in laughs, subtitles and nonsense.—N. Y. American.

"It is bound to please old, young and indistinguishable. In fact, audiences at the Colony where it opened Sunday made an uproarious fuss over it. . . . Those who have been delighted by this, the most famous farce in the world, will find that the Christie version has preserved all the old favorite moves and added some hysteria of its own."—Telegram-Mail.

"If you know anybody that needs cheering up, by all means take them to see Syd Chaplin in 'Charley's Aunt.' This famous farce has long been a world beater on the stage, but as a picture it beats everything on record."—Daily Mirror.

Telegraphic reports received by Producers' Distributing Corporation indicate that the picture has duplicated its New York reception in the openings at Chicago and Los Angeles.

Conway Tearle's Name on Metro-Goldwyn Contract

CONWAY TEARLE has been signed to appear in several Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer special productions, it was announced by that company this week. Tearle, after completing work on a film in New York City, will leave at once for the West Coast to start work in the first picture planned for him under the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract.

In this company's special production, "The Great Divide," directed by Reginald Barker from Waldemar Young's adaptation of the William Vaughn Moody stage success, Tearle has the leading role opposite Alice Terry. It is a March release.

Tearle's work in this production, which is regarded by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as one of the very biggest this season, won him the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract.

What his first role will be under the new arrangement has not been announced, but Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has a number of big productions planned for early filming, from which the story for Tearle's first appearance will be selected.

"The Great Divide" brought Conway Tearle to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer banner for the first time, and his performance in this special is said to be the best in his screen career. Given a recent preview in a Los Angeles neighborhood house, "The Great Divide" was received with the greatest acclaim of any of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's pictures so far this season.

It offers Tearle the role of a Westerner, an unusual portrayal for him, and is expected to add greatly to his already large following. Tearle plays Stephen Ghent, who buys an Eastern girl from his drunken companions when they encounter her alone on an Arizona ranch. He forces her into marriage and "The Great Divide" relates the problem of the chasm that stands between her Puritanical standards and his lawless desire. Alice Terry is the girl.

Others in the cast of "The Great Divide" are Wallace Beery, Huntly Gordon, Allan Forrest, and ZaSu Pitts.

New Barthelmess Picture

With "Classmates" booming along at a fast clip and promising to become his greatest success up to date, Richard Barthelmess' new Inspiration picture for the First National program, "New Toys," will soon be ready for release in the Leader Group of pictures.

"New Toys," from the stage play by Oscar Hammerstein II and Milton Herbert Gropper, is a comedy with a powerful and dramatic story about which the comedy situations revolve.

Anita Stewart Returns to Vitagraph for "Baree" Film

ANITA STEWART is to star in Vitagraph's "Baree, Son of Kazan," the picturization of James Oliver Curwood's novel, which David Smith is producing at Hollywood. Announcement was made this week by John B. Rock, general manager of Vitagraph.

Miss Stewart will have the role of Nepeese, the French-Indian girl who is the central figure about which the action in the romance of the Canadian North revolves. It is characterization for which she is admirably adapted, and the officials of Vitagraph consider themselves particularly fortunate in having obtained her services.

Miss Stewart has only recently finished her work in the leading feminine role of "Never the Twain Shall Meet," Cosmopolitan's adaptation of Peter B. Kyne's novel, which is soon to be released. Her latest picture previously to that was "The Great White Way."

In "Baree, Son of Kazan," Donald Keith will play Jim Carvel, the fugitive who, believing he is wanted for murder, finds refuge in Canada, only to learn later that his supposed victim recovered. Carvel, after a tempestuous courtship, wins Nepeese. Joe Dickson is to appear as Pierre, the girl's father, and Jack Curtiss as McTaggart, the brutal, unscrupulous trading post factor.

The most famous of dog actors on the screen, Wolf, is to have the title role. Wolf's remarkable screen career followed distinguished service for the Allies in the Great War. He was personally decorated by Marshal Foch, the only dog ever to receive that mark of distinction from the hands of a French general.

Interest in Mr. Curwood's gripping story and Vitagraph's plans for its picturization have been heightened by the marvelous exploits of Balto and his canine companions in carrying anti-toxin to sufferers in Alaska and allaying a raging epidemic in the last few days. Wolf is of exactly the same type of animal and some of his performances in "Baree, Son of Kazan" rival in intelligence that of those dogs who have been figuring in newspaper dispatches.

"Capital Punishment" Novelized

"Capital Punishment," a special production from B. P. Schulberg recently released, has been novelized by Lewis Levenson, well known fiction writer. This novelization is already being syndicated to ten big city papers. George Hackathorne, Elliott Dexter, and Clara Bow head the picture's cast.

Two Schulberg Pictures at The Piccadilly in a Month

J. G. BACHMANN, vice-president and general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, announced this week that the premieres of two Schulberg pictures will take place this month at the Piccadilly Theatre.

Under a contract just signed, Lee Ochs, managing director of the Piccadilly, will give the first presentation of "The Boomerang," adapted from David Belasco's world famous stage success and directed by Gasnier. The cast is headed by Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell and Donald Keith.

"The Boomerang" will go into the Piccadilly beginning February 21st and will continue for two weeks. The management looks forward to big crowds for the picturization of this comedy drama which exceeded six hundred consecutive performances when presented on the stage.

Preceding the engagement of "The Boomerang," the Picadilly will present the first screening of Gasnier's production, "The Parasite," adapted from the novel by Helen Martin. The opening date for this picture is February 14th. In the cast of "The Parasite" are Owen Moore, Madge Bellamy, Lilyan Tashman, Bryant Washburn, Mary Carr, Bruce Guerin and Dorothy Dwan.

Mr. Schulberg and Gasnier were among the arrivals in New York from Hollywood this week. Mr. Schulberg is in the east to purchase material for next year's program while Director Gasnier is taking his annual vacation to see the new crop of plays on Broadway. They will return the latter part of February to begin the remainder of the Schulberg schedule for this season.

Byrd Vitagraph Manager

Announcement is made of the appointment as Vitagraph branch manager at Oklahoma City of J. N. Byrd, a veteran in the sales end of pictures and a member of the Vitagraph organization several years. Mr. Byrd took charge of the post January 22. Mr. Byrd's first employment in the industry was with Fox, whom he served as salesman at the Dallas office from 1915 to 1920. During the latter year he was on the staff of Paramount, after which he went to Southwest Film Company. On August 1, 1922 he went to Vitagraph as salesman on the Dallas staff, remaining until his appointment as Oklahoma City branch manager.

"Love's Bargain," Society Drama Listed for Release by F. B. O.

"LOVE'S BARGAIN," a society drama, co-starring Marjorie Daw and Clive Brook, has been bought by F. B. O. for distribution. The production, which is a gorgeously dressed and lavishly mounted society drama, was made by Archibald Nettleford, and directed by Burton George.

An entire musical comedy has been reproduced in the picture. One of the high spots is a huge typewriter on the stage of a theatre with the keys manipulated by pretty girls, who are sitting on them. The sets are said to have cost the producer a fortune, and the gowns worn by the two leading ladies were made especially for this production by one of the leading couturiers of Paris.

The story concerns the love life of a young girl who seeks fame and fortune on the stage. She marries a very wealthy society man, although she loves a young artist. Her husband's fortune is at her disposal, but because she does not love him, she sacrifices the stage career which has now become so easily accessible. Her husband, who adores her, is content to have her as a wife in name only. This continues for some time, until he realizes that she will never learn to love him. A divorce is secured, and the girl finds happiness with the man of her heart, while her husband is left to face the future alone with his memories.

"Love's Bargain" is scheduled as one of F. B. O.'s specials for 1925.

Associated Exhibitors Now at Work on "Fifty-Fifty"

J. S. WOODY, General Manager of Associated Exhibitors, announced that the Diamant Films of America, Inc., have started camera work this week at the Jackson Avenue Studios, New York, on the first of a series of feature productions to be made under the terms of a contract recently negotiated between the two organizations. The first offering to be filmed is titled "Fifty Fifty" and is an adaptation from an original story by Robert Shirley.

The production of "Fifty Fifty" will be personally supervised by Henry Diamant Berger, head of the producing company. Mr. Berger has attained considerable prominence both here and abroad for his work as a motion picture producer and director. Among his outstanding screen successes are the Continental film version of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" made in 1915, and Alexander Dumas' "The Three Musketeers," which was shown in America under the title of "My Lady." Other popular productions that he directed are "The Little Cafe," "One Night in Paris" and "Twenty Years After."

Mr. Berger plans to produce "Fifty Fifty" on an elaborate scale. Some strikingly designed interior sets have been constructed for the pictheatres in which the picture was being played. ture, the most spectacular of which is the reproduction of the famous New York Bar in Paris. Some intensely interesting atmosphere scenes have been filmed by Berger in the French Capital showing the Paris underworld and including typical Apache resorts of the present day. Another striking feature of the film is to be an expose of the notorious Grand Duke's tour of the Paris Underworld, through which no tourist may go without police protection.

The cast selected to portray the leading roles of the picture is made up of an excellent array of screen stars headed by Lionel Barrymore, Hope Hampton, Louise Glaum, Arthur Donaldson, J. Moy Bennett and Jean Del Val.

Exploiting Rin-Tin-Tin

The Bond Photoplay Corporation, an affiliation of the Apollo Exchange, franchise holder for Warner Bros. pictures in New York state, reports it did a big business with Rin-Tin-Tin, in "The Lighthouse by The Sea," with a simple street advertising stunt put on in Buffalo while the picture was playing the houses in that district. The stunt consisted of two police dogs blanketed with advertisements of the picture, led about the city by two lads in lighthouse keeper uniforms. The street display never failed to draw a crowd at all hours of the day, and resulted in attracting the public to the

Fleming Completes "Adventure"

Jack London's "Adventure," produced by Victor Fleming, has been completed in the Paramount studio at Hollywood. Tom Mooree, Pauline Starke, Wallace Beery, Raymond Hatton and Walter McGrail are featured.

More than two weeks of the picture's production were spent on an island in the South Pacific.

Sennett Signs McKee

The highlight of the week's happenings at the Mack Sennett Studios was the signing of Raymond McKee, the well-known dramatic screen juvenile, by Mack Sennett, the veteran Pathe comedy producer. Mr. McKee comes to the famous comedy lot after a series of dramtic successes in the feature field. Production work continues with unabated vigor on the schedule of two-reel comedies for Pathe distribution.

F. B. O. Lists Seven Features and Seven Short Subjects for March

THE March release schedule will break all records for quantity and quality of the Film Booking Office product. Seven features and seven short subjects are scheduled on the program, headed by the Gothic special, "Parisian Nights."

"Parisian Nights" is a story of the Paris underworld, written by Emil Forst, and directed by Al Santell. The cast is headed by Elaine Hammerstein, Lou Tellegen, and Renee Adoree. It is scheduled for March 1 release.

Next comes "Jimmie's Millions," the first of the new Richard Talmadge productions under that star's new contract with F. B. O. "Jimmie's Millions" is a swift-moving comedy drama, in which the intrepid Talmadge is called upon to perform double his usual amount of death-defying feats. The story comes from the pen of John Moroso, with the adaptation by John Howard Clark. The production was directed by James P. Hogan, and photographed by William Marshall. In Mr. Talmadge's support are Betty Francisco, Charles Clary, Brinsley Shaw, Dick Sutherland, Ina Anson, Lee Moran and Wade Boteler. "Jimmie Millions" is also scheduled for March 1st release.

March 8 will see the release of Bob Custer's fourth "Texas Ranger" production for Independent Pictures Corporation, titled "Galloping Vengeance." Mary Beth Milford, formerly one of the stars of the Music Box Revue, and later in F. B. O.'s "Fighting Blood" series, will play opposite Custer. William James Craft will direct. The supporting cast has not yet been selected.

"That Devil Quemado!" is the first picture Fred Thomson will make since his recent accident. It is the second of the new Thomson series, which F. B. O. is producing. "That Devil Quemado!" was published as a complete novel in The Popular Magazine, and comes from the pen of Marvin Wilhite. Ann May will be Mr. Thomson's leading lady in his new production, and Del Andrews will direct. The supporting cast will be announced shortly. "That Devil Quemado!" will be released on March 15.

"Love's Bargain" is the title of an independent production, produced by Archibald Nettleford, directed by Burton George, and featuring Marjorie Daw and Clive Brook, which F. B. O. will distribute. "Love's Bargain" is a gorgeously dressed society drama, and will be released on March 22.

The fifth "Lefty" Flynn production, "Speed Wild," is also slated for March 22 release. Ann May is scheduled to play opposite "Lefty." Harry Garson will direct, and the supporting cast is now being selected.

Ben Wilson has completed the first of a new series of Westerns starring Yakima Canutt, the famous cowboy, for Film Booking Offices. It is based on an original story by Canutt himself, called "Scar Hannan," the title of which will doubtless be changed. It is set for March 29.

Among the seven short subjects which will be released by F. B. O. in March are:

"Welcome Granger," No. 1 of F. B. O.'s series, "The Pacemakers," based on stories by Harry C. Witwer, with continuities by Beatrice Van. Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara are co-starred, and Wesley Ruggles is directing. "Welcome Granger" will be released on March 1.

Screen Almanac No. 9, a one reel novelty showing off-stage moments of cinema celebrities, produced by Standard Cinema Corporation and edited by E. V. Durling, will be released on March 10.

"The Helping Hand," a Jimmy Aubrey two-reel comedy, also made by Standard Cinema Corporaiton, will be shown on March 15.

"He Who Gets Rapped," No. 2 of "The Pacemakers," co-starring Alberta Vaughn and George O'Hara will also be released on March 15. No. 3 of "The Pacemakers," as yet untitled, is set for March 29, as is Dinkly Doodle No. 7 (as yet untitled), a one reel cartoon, directed by Walter Lanz.

Stadium Signs Walker

Stadium Pictures, Inc., signed Mickey Walker, the popular welterweight champion of the world, to appear in a series of moving pictures, to be made in New York upon his return from Los Angeles, after his fight with Bert Colima, February 24.

Mickey has had the picture "bee" in his bonnet for some time and the screen tests proved he was "there." Mickey's advisor and manager, Joe Degnon, is well pleased with his champion's coming appearance on the screen.

Star and Manager

"Doug" MacLean Goes to Honolulu; Bogart Rogers to New York

Bogart Rogers, general manager for Douglas MacLean Productions, and Mrs. Rogers are enroute to New York. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers will probably arrive in the Big City on Saturday.

Mr. Rogers is coming East following the completion of the fourth of the Douglas MacLean Productions for Associated Exhibitors. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas MacLean, who left for a short vacation at Honolulu upon completion of the star's work in "Introduce Me," the first print of which has just been received at the home office of Associated Exhibitors, will follow his general manager to New York within a week or ten days, coming direct from Honolulu, east.

Unusual plans are being made for the release of "Introduce Me." One of the features of the campaign is the fact that special screenings of the picture will be held before audiences in each of the exchange and key cities. Plans are being made for upwards of one hundred special screenings of this nature, the first to be held in New York within the near future.

Pathe's Shadow-Box

Distributors Will Supply Accessory for Advertising Purposes

Through an arrangement with the Animated Products Co., the Pathe Exchanges, Inc., are offering a novel accessory to exhibitors which is expected to prove of real benefit to them in the exploitation of their product to the public. The accessory consists of a shadow-box equipped with a lighting arrangement that flashes on and off. This projects a light through a specially constructed slide, advertising the coming or current attraction. The boxes are built of a size that makes them practical in either a theatre lobby or in a store window and are very easily put into operation. The boxes are released at this time with an idea of using them in the exploitation of the latest Patheserial, "Idaho."

"Neptune's Nieces"

John Hawkinson, producer of Grantland Rice's Sportlight series for Pathe, returned from Bermuda last week after making of the newest "Sportlight," "Neptune's Nieces," to be released March 8th.

Completing "Chadwick Nine" For 1924-1925 Programme

WITH "The Midnight Girl," starring Lila Lee, sixth of the "Chadwick Nine," nearing completion at the Long Island Studios, I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, is now preparing to complete production on the balance of his schedule for 1924-1925. The three remaining subjects of the Chadwick Nine are "The Romance of An Actress," "Sunshine of Paradise Alley" and the third Lionel Barrymore special.

"The Midnight Girl" is being directed by Wilfred Noy, producer of "The Fast Pace," and "The Lost Chord." Lila Lee, who recently completed a production for Famous Players, heads the cast, which includes Gareth Hughes, Dolores Cassinelli, Charlotte Walker and Frank Andrews.

"The Midnight Girl," first announced as "The Street Singer," is an original story by Garrett Fort, written especially for Miss Lee, whose brunette beauty is well fitted to the role of the Russian immigrant. This production will mark the return to the screen of Gareth Hughes, star of J. M. Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy."

G. W. (Billy) Bitzer whose many productions for D. W. Griffith place him in the front rank of cinematographers, has been signed for the camera work, together with Frank Zukor.

"The Romance of an Actress," seventh of the "Chadwick Nine," will appeal to those who are condemned by circumstances to the humdrum existence of every day life. That is the reason that every year thousands of youngsters run away from home to the big cities to seek fortunes on the stage. That is the reason why the stage always has appealed and always will appeal to every walk of life.

Chadwick Pictures Corporation has arranged with the Montgomery Circulation Service to put behind this production a publicity and advertising campaign seldom equalled in the exploitation of motion pictures. This campaign calls for advertisements in more than five hundred daily and Sunday newspapers throughout the United States. It will include a campaign conducted by the Montgomery Service to discover new talent for the screen, with a contest conducted throughout the country.

The first ten winners of this contest will be given an opportunity to appear in "The Romance of an Actress." The first two will be given guaranteed parts. The remaining eight will be given parts in this or other pictures. The contest will run until the first of the year and a large amount of advertising and publicity material will be used by the newspapers and magazines in behalf of this contest.

"The Romance of an Actress" is by Langdon McCormack, who made "The Storm."

"Sunshine of Paradise Alley," eight of the "Chadwick Nine," is probably one of the greatest productions from a showman's angle of recent years. It is from the famous play of the same name by Denman Thompson, author of one of the most popular of all American dramas," "The Old Homestead." This author's fame and following alone are enough to insure a production success.

"Sunshine of Paradise Alley" was played as a legitimate stage production more than one hundred thousand times, in practically every nook and corner of the world. It has been counted upon as a production which would bring the money into the box office.

The ninth and last production on the Chadwick program will be the third Lionel Barrymore special, adapted from a famous stage play.

"The Desert Flower"

Lloyd Hughes, recently signed by First National under a long term contract, again is to play opposite Colleen Moore in her newest First National starring vehicle "The Desert Flower" which is scheduled to go into production next week at the United Studio. In "Sally," just completed, Hughes also was Colleen Moore's leading man. "The Desert Flower" has been adapetd to the screen by June Mathis, editor-in-chief, from the stage play of the same name written by Don Mullally. Irving Cummings, through arrangement with M. C. Levee, has been chosen to direct the feature.

Tom Mix is the star of William Fox's "Riders of the Purple Sage." At right is a big car used to film some of the star's mad rides, while at left is shown the rider as the camera got him.

Douglas Fairbanks Decides On Another Costly Picture

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS has stepped from the land of fantasy back to the realm of realism for his new picture, "Don Q," based on the novel, "Don Q's Love Story," by K. and Hesketh Prichard. The new Fairbanks story has no relation whatever to Cervante's "Don Quixote," as many people are inclined to believe.

While "Don Q" will be less fantastic than Doug's last screen offering, it nevertheless will be just as spectacular, and the production will be on fully as expensive and stupendous a scale as was "The Thief of Bagdad."

Doug performs many spectacular stunts in the new picture, accomplishing no end of seemingly impossible feats with a muleteer's whip. This, in fact, is his chief weapon, and with it he disarms and defeats his enemies.

Manuel de los Rios, famous bull fighter of Seville, is teaching Doug the fine points of the famous Spanish sport, thus enabling him to overcome a bull which runs wild in the streets of the Audalusian town where much of the action of the play occurs. Arrangements are now being made to import two bulls from Mexico City. These animals, bred especially for work in the bull ring at the Mexican capital, will be shipped by train direct to Los Angeles.

All of the sets for the picture have been designed by Francisco Cugat, of Barcelona, one of Spain's foremost artists.

If plans now under consideration are carried through, many of the exteriors will be made in Spain, especially in Madrid and the picturesque province of Andalusia.

"From the standpoint of costly production," said Douglas Fairbanks, "this picture is very apt to more than rival 'The Thief of Bagdad.' Whatever dissimilarity there is will lie in the type of story rather than the cost of production. Our interpretation of the Arabian Nights story was the visualization of our dreams—of that which never was and never could be true. This story, on the other hand, brings us back to the land of possibilities of things that are. We will present a very human story, one that we feel will be very picturesque and appealing. The Prichard novel which forms the basis of our story, has in it all the elements for the greatest romantic melodrama ever screened."

In addition to Mary Astor, who was selected as leading lady a week ago, the following feminine names have been added to the cast: Lottie Pickford Forrest, sister of the famous Mary, in the character of Lola, a role carrying much of the intrigue of the play, and Stella de Lanti as Queen Isabella the Second.

Sebastian, most villainous of two villains in the piece, will be played by Donald Crisp, who is also directing. The second heavy, known as Fabrique, is to be portrayed by Jean Hersholt, one of the screen's best actors.

Warner Oland, well known on both stage and screen, has been given the part of Archduke Paul of Austria. Jack McDonald, whose screen characterizations are well knownfi will be seen as General de Vayo, father of the heroine. Robledo, servant of Don Q, will be interpreted by Charles Stevens. His work as D'Artagnan's man servant in "The Three Musketeers" was one of the finest things of its kind ever screened.

These men have much to do with the success of "Don Q," Douglas Fairbanks' photoplay now in the making. From left to right they are: Ted Reed, production manager; Douglas Fairbanks, Donald Crisp, who is directing the film and also playing an important part; "Chuck" Lewis, assistant director; Robert Fairbanks, Doug's brother, and Edward M. Langley, art director.

Starts "Stop Flirting"

Christie Begins Production of Big Feature Comedy; Scott Sidney is Directing

"Stop Flirting," Al. Christie's next big feature comedy went into production this week at the Christie studios under the direction of Scott Sidney, with Jack Duffy and Jimmie Adams added to the big cast of comedians.

Jack Duffy, who registered a personal hit in the recent Christie feature, "Reckless Romance," will get the comedy butler part in the new feature, and Adams will play the role of a flirty Italian count.

Adams, it seems, can't manage to keep his hair on his head owing to the exigencies of picture making. In "Hold Your Breath" he was cast as a bald-headed beauty parlor expert and had his head shaved. He'll have to do the same thing over again for "Stop Flirting" because apparently an essential part of the love-making nobleman's makeup is barren head and toupee.

The others in the cast will be John T. Murray and Wanda Hawley in the feature roles, Ethel Shannon, Vera Steadman, Hallam Cooley, David James and Jimmie Harrison.

Gilbert Warrenton has joined the Christie staff as chief photographer on this production. Joseph Farnham is writing the scenario, James Clemens is the assistant, and Norman McLeod the gag man. The picture is for release late in March or early April through Producers' Distributing Corporation

Vitagraph Borrows Keith

B. P. Schulberg's new juvenile find, Donald Keith, whom the producer recently signed to a long term contract, is already in demand for important screen roles in other studios. Mr. Schulberg has loaned Keith to Vitagraph for the leading masculine role in their special production, "Baree, Son of Kazan," by James Oliver Curwood. In this new picture Donald Keith will play in support of Anita Stewart with whom he is also being co-featured in B. P. Schulberg's screen version of David Belasco's play, "The Boomerang."

Fox Leaves for West Coast; to Plan Production Work

WILLIAM FOX, president of Fox Film Corporation, has left New York for Hollywood. The purpose of the producer's visit to the West Coast is to whip into shape his studio force there for the beginning of production on his 1925-26 releases.

He will make his headquarters in Hollywood for at least three months, and during this time will personally lay out the plans which will be followed by the production department in filming the exceptional mass of scripts he has purchased for next season's product.

This material includes all the John Golden stage successes to be produced in conjunction with the stage producer, and which are considered one of the most important groups of productions on the 1925-26 schedule.

Of similar importance with the picturization of the Golden plays is the selection of material for Tom Mix, cowboy star, who has just renewed his contract with Mr. Fox. During his stay at the West Coast Studios the producer and star will go over the plans for the Mix productions and arrange for the purchase of the best outdoor stories available. This is in line with the determination of the producer to keep Mix in "Westerns," the kind of pictures that have made that star a world-wide favorite. In this connection, it was stated there will be exceptions in the event of a vehicle such as "Dick Turpin" turning up. The success of Mix in the role of the eighteenth century bandit has proved to the satisfaction of the producer that Mix can step out of his chaps and sombrero and still be a success.

Other transitions that will occupy the producer during his Western sojourn will be the adaptations of "Havoc" and "Lazybones," stage successes of the current season, recently acquired after spirited bidding in the open market.

"Havoc," according to tentative plans, will be one of the important special productions to be released next season. It is expected that this story will lend itself in a much bigger way to a screen production than it did to a legitimate stage presentation.

"Lazybones," by Owen Davis, writer of many stage successes, is expected to achieve a unique success because of its homeliness, tempered tragedy and irresistible sweetness.

Another production that will occupy the attention of the producer is "Siberia." This adaptation of the stage play of the same name, that won the plaudits of an earlier generation, will bring to the screen, with realism never before attempted, life in the Northern wastes. The plot of this play makes it, in the opinion of Fox officials, more potent with the material that spells "Success" than anything on hand for next season.

Incidental to his activity regarding production, Mr. Fox will interest himself, while at Hollywood, in arranging for the Los Angeles premiere of the three specials on the 1925-26 theatre schedule already completed: "The Iron Horse," "The Man Without a Country," and "The Fool," Harry Millarde's masterpiece from Channing Pollock's stage success.

The scenarios of "Lightnin'" and "The First Year," which have just been finished by Francis Marion, will also be the object of the producer's critical attention.

George O'Brien, the smiling young star introduced this season to the public by Mr. Fox, will for the first time since he attained stardom meet his sponsor. Alma Rubens and Madge Bellamy will also be interviewed by the producer. He recently signed these stars to long term contracts to appear in his productions.

The star series productions of the company will not be overlooked by the visitor. Plans for the Shirley Mason, Buck Jones and Edmund Lowe productions will be gone over in detail.

Mr. Fox is taking with him careful plans for his comedies that should result in a very superior set of two-reelers for next season.

Colleen Moore Wins Prize as Greatest of "Baby" Stars

COLLEEN MOORE is the "baby" star of the screen who has made the greatest advance in artistry and popularity of any of her motion picture contemporaries during the past four years.

This was officially recorded at the annual Wampas frolic and ball, held last week at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles, when Miss Moore was presented with a thousand-dollar trophy as a reward for being elected to what film circles consider the greatest honor ever accorded a motion picture actress.

The Wampas is the West Coast Association of Motion Picture Advertisers (and publicity men), organized four years ago from the personnel of the different film companies in California.

The selection of Miss Moore for the honor was made by editors of motion picture fan magazines and trade papers, whom the Wampas felt would be able to give the most adequate decision reflecting the general sentiment of the American public and of the exhibitors. Los Angeles newspaper editors also voted, as the Wampas felt their votes would indicate the feeling of the motion picture colony.

Miss Moore was picked from the thirty-nine baby stars, elected by the Wampas in the years 1922, 1923 and 1924, as the most promising of the newer generation of film players, and the presentation of Arthur J. Kline's gold trophy-cup was made by the master of ceremonies, Bert Lytell.

Colleen attended the ball at the urgent request of the Wampas members, who stated that there was a surprise in store for her, and against her physician's orders, she having been injured on location at Barstow two days previous during the making of scenes for her latest picture, "The Desert Flower."

The Wampas announced at the ball that the presentation of a yearly trophy to the baby-star having shown the greatest advancement since the inception of the baby-star idea would hereafter be a regular feature of their annual frolics, though past winners would be eliminated from the competition.

Within the past two years Colleen Moore, to whom falls the honor of being the first winner of the Wampas trophy, has had a prenomenal rise to success on the screen, beginning with the signing of a contract with First National Pictures.

A few years earlier she had been "discovered" by D. W. Griffith, and had parts in two of his pictures—"An Old-Fashioned Young Man" and "Hands Up." Then she drifted to other producers, playing leads for Charlie Ray, King Vidor, Marshall Neilan, the late Allen Holubar, and others.

Then came her contract with First National and a series of brilliant successes overshadowing all her past performances. These included "Flaming Youth," "Painted People," "The Perfect Flapper," "Flirting With Love" and, more recently, "So Big." Colleen, now a full-fledged star, has just completed a screen version of Ziegfeld's musical comedy hit, "Sally," which will be an early release, and is now in the midst of production on "The Desert Flower," by Don Mullally.

Off to Cuba

All interiors finished and work on the exterior scenes about to be made, "The White Mice" company has left for Cuba.

The scenes will be shot around Morro Castle and other famous landmarks of Cuba, covering the theme of Richard Harding Davis' story.

"The White Mice" is a Wilson-Wetherald Production directed by Edward H. Griffith and starring Jacqueline Logan. It is being shot in natural colors and is the first feature length production for this company.

The cast will be in Havana for about three weeks.

Scenes from "Super Speed," the third Harry J. Brown production starring Reed Howes and released through Rayart Pictures. Mildred Harris is featured in support of Howes.

Begin Work on "Desert Flower"

Director Al Cummings and John E. McCormick, First National's West Coast representative, have completed the cast to support Colleen Moore in her second starring vehicle for First National, "The Desert Flower," from Don Mullally's new play.

Lloyd Hughes is Miss Moore's leading man. Other important roles will be acted by Kate Price, Isabelle Keith, Anna May Walthall, Frank Brownlee, William Norton Bailey, Geno Corrado, Fred Warren and Monte Collins.

Shooting started on "The Desert Flower" on January 26 on location at Barstow, Calif.

Walsh Working on New Play

George Walsh, the new star of the Chadwick Pictures Corporation, arrived in California last week and is now busily engaged with preliminary arrangements for the making of "American Pluck," the first of a series of romantic comedy dramas he will make for this company. "American Pluck," which is from an original story especially written for the star, will be similar in type to the kind of action pictures which first established him among the leading male stars of the screen. The cast, which will include several well known players, will be announced shortly. Edmund Lawrence will direct "American Pluck."

The Serial City

The Chicago branch of the Pathe Exchanges, Inc., has signed the serial, "Galloping Hoofs," in six theatres in a zone where there are seven theatres.

In Pathe's Chicago branch office this zone is known as No. 101 and includes the following theatres: The Avon, the Karlov, the Bell, the Armitage, the New Home, the Liberty and the Glen.

Of these theatres all but the Glen are running "Galloping Hoofs."

Wilson Starring Canutt

Contracts have been signed between Ben Wilson, the producer, and Film Booking Offices, whereby Wilson will produce a series of four Westerns for F. B. O. distribution, starring Yakimo Canutt, the famous cowboy.

The first production has just been completed. It is based on an original story by Canutt himself called "Scar Hannan," the title of which will doubtless be changed. Supporting Canutt are Dorothy Woods, Helen Bruneau, Palmer Morrison, Richard Hatton, George Lassey, Francis Ford, Art Walker, Frank Baker, and Ben Wilson, Jr.

Hiers Has Strong Support

Walter Hiers will have a big supporting cast in "Rarin' Romeo," the two reel Educational-Walter Hiers Comedy in which he is working at the Christie Studio. As leading lady he has Duane Thompson, who has received much attention lately as one of the 13 baby stars of 1925, Rosa Gore, former prominent vaudeville actress with the team of Crimmins & Gore, Bill Blaisdell, who, by the way is bigger than Hiers in bulk, Jack Duffy, who sprang into prominence lately as the funny grandfather in the Christie feature, "Reckless Romance," and David James who is also playing a prominent role in the film production of "Charley's Aunt."

C. B. C. Announces New Series

With the completion and release of "The Fearless Lover," C. B. C. has completed its series of eight Perfection Pictures as announced at the beginning of last season.

With the experience gained from this last series C. B. C. has entered the lists with the announcement of another series of fast clean action pictures also to be known as the Perfection series.

William Fairbanks has been signed for the whole of the coming year to play the lead in their series.

Eastern Plant Busy

First National Studio's Working Fast on Many Big Productions

Two Earl Hudson units are now at work at the Eastern Studios of First National with two additional ones to get under way within a week.

Ben Lyon and Viola Dana are creating the leading roles in "The Necessary Evil," which George Archainbaud is directing. The story is an adaptation of "Uriah's Son," a magazine story by Stephen Vincent Benet.

"Chickie," with an all-star cast, has been in the process of filming for a week. Dorothy Mackaill has the role of "Chickie," the heroine of the novel which appeared as a newspaper serial. In the supporting cast are John Bowers, Hobart Bosworth, Gladys Brockwell, Myrtle Stedman, Paul Nicholson, Olive Tell and Lora Sonderson. John Francis Dillon is directing.

Milton Sills is getting ready to start work on "The Making of O'Malley," the drama of a New York policeman. Lambert Hillyer, who will direct, is collaborating with Jack Clifford on the script.

Doris Kenyon will within the week begin work on "The Half Way Girl." The company will go to Florida for location scenes.

Helen Ware in "Soul Fire"

Helen Ware, the noted stage emotional actress, has been added by Inspiration to the cast of its present Richard Barthelmess starring vehicle for First National release, "Soul-Fire," from Martin Brown's play, "Great Music." Miss Ware will play the part of Frisco Sal, which she originated in the stage play.

Big Serial Booking

The biggest serial booking ever reported in upper New York State was taken last week by Bernard Mills of the First Graphic Exchanges of Albany when he contracted with the Schine Circuit for twenty-two towns on "Battling Brewster," the Rayart serial starring Franklyn Farnum and Helen Holmes.

Four Warner Pictures

Preliminary Work Being Done on 1925-26 Programme.

With the end of the present production season in sight there was renewed activity on the Warner Bros. lot in Hollywood this week, when preparations were started on four of next year's pictures.

To Millard Webb, who has just completed "My Wife and I," was assigned the direction of "The Golden Cocoon," the first novel of Ruth Cross, which was one of the best sellers of last year. The scenario is being prepared by Hope Loring and Louis Lighton. Mr. Millard will start casting next week.

Dorothy Farnum has completed the adaptation of Kathleen Norris's novel, "Rose of the World," and Harry Beaumont, who just got through directing "Recompense," has been assigned to it. The scenario is being done by Julien Josephson, and Mr. Beaumont is preparing to cast.

"The Limited Mail," famous old stage melodrama bought by Warner Bros. recently, has been assigned for adaptation to Darryl Francis Zanuck, who will bring it up to date.

Rin-Tin-Tin's next picture, following "Tracked In the Snow Country" just completed, will be "Below the Line."

These pictures will go into production just as soon as Jack Warner, in charge of production, returns to Hollywood from New York.

Johnson Starts New Picture

Postponing until summer his plan to make a production in Norway, which will trace the history of maritime adventure and growth, Emory Johnson, the producer, has arranged to start work almost immediately on a new production for Film Booking Offices. The story, written by Emilie Johnson, the producer's mother, and as yet untitled, will deal with the life of a young physician.

Orpheum Books "Rag Man"

"The Rag Man," a comedy written by Willard Mack, starring Jackie Coogan, has been booked into the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago, for a run immediately following "Charley's Aunt," it was announced at the Metro-Goldwyn offices. A big advertising and exploitation campaign is being planned for the showing of "The Rag Man."

Other first run sfor March are Crandall's Metropolitan in Washington, Loew's Orpheum in Boston, Loew's State in Cleveland and Loew's Valentine in Toledo, Cincinnati, Los Angeles and San Francisco runs follow. Coincident with the announcement of the release of "The Rag Man" by Metro-Goldwyn it was stated that the Coogans had engaged Willard Mack to write Jackie's next picture. This will make three stories from the pen of the prolific playwright whose new stage play, "The Dove," will be presented by David Belasco on Broadway soon.

BETTY BRONSON
Who will follow her triumph, "Peter Pan," with "Are Parents People?" for Paramount.

Nazimova in Los Angeles

Critics in Movie Capital Praise Star in "The Redeeming Sin"

Nazimova, opening a run at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, in "The Redeeming Sin," the J. Stuart Blackton production which is her first starring vehicle under the Vitagraph banner, was declared by the local newspaper critics to attain heights of artistry she had not reached before.

The Los Angeles reviewers are, of course, the most notoriously "hard boiled" of all. Their town is the capital of moviedom, and to achieve success there, where everybody is as nearly "fed-up" with pictures as a public anywhere can be, is to pass the severest of tests. This, if the crowds at the California Theatre and the unanimous testimony of the reviewers can be accepted, is what Nazimova and "The Redeeming Sin" have done.

Completes "Thundering Herd"

With the completion of "The Thundering Herd" this week, Paramount has finished one of the biggest productions ever made of a picture of this type. The herd of two thousand buffalo which forms the basis for the title of the picture, was a problem as big as the handling of the huge cattle herd in "North of 36." Five large location camps were built in order to take care of the thousand Arapaho Indians, and the large technical staff which Director William K. Howard had to transport from one location site to another.

Featured in the cast are Jack Holt, Lois Wilson, Noah Beery, Raymond Hatton, and Charles Ogle.

Roach Signs Contract

Bert Roach, one of the best known comedians in motion pictures, has been placed under a long-term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in consequence of the personal triumph scored by him in Rupert Hughes's "Excuse Me." Roach's performance in this sensationally successful comedy is an outstanding feature of the picture.

Working on New Releasing Policy on Its Leader Group

THE distribution department of First National Pictures is working toward a new releasing policy in the distribution of its Leader Group of pictures for 1925. E. A. Eschmann, head of the department, has been impelled to this change through the very clear indication of the box office value of the Leader Group, due to the fact that exhibitors have been consistently setting the playing time on this product well in advance of the release date.

The company is gradually working toward a condition whereby the important key city points will play First National pictures simultaneously on release dates. Mr. Eschmann has asked the co-operation of franchise holders toward bringing about such a condition. Their response has been most encouraging.

He was further influenced by the fact that the new Richard Barthelmess picture, "Classmates," was played in 125 theatres simultaneously throughout the country on its release date.

"A Thief in Paradise," which was released recently, was shown in seventy-five key city and other important points. "So Big" had many big key city runs in the first three weeks following release.

Plans are under way for the simultaneous showing of Richard Barthelmess' next picture, "New Toys," and Colleen Moore's first stellar vehicle, "Sally," in many important key city points on the release dates of those productions.

"There is sound business policy back of simultaneous showings in the strategic key city points," said Mr. Eschmann, "particularly in the case of quality productions, such as 'A Thief in Paradise,' the first of the Leader Group to be released, 'Classmates,' which was a Pace Maker, and such forthcoming leaders as 'Sally' and 'New Toys.' First National has devoted much time, ability and money in its advertising and publicity campaigns on these productions and it stands to reason that the exhibitor who books them while that publicity and advertising is still fresh in the minds of the public will reap a bigger harvest than he will be playing them several months later.

"First National and its franchise holders will profit mutually from the simultaneous key city showings of the company's quality product. Exhibitors themselves are showing their appreciation of this fact through their setting of the playing time of our new Leader pictures well in advance of their release dates.

"How far this new releasing policy will be carried it is too early to say, but I am confident that franchise holders, once they have proved to themselves that it does increase their revenue, will wish to extend the policy of simultaneous showings."

F. B. O. Buys "Bandit's Baby"

The purchase of an original story by Leete Renick Brown, "The Bandit's Baby," was announced by B. P. Fineman, general manager of the F. B. O. studios. It will serve as a starring vehicle for Fred Thomson, the western star and the continuity is now being prepared under the supervision of Edward J. Montagne, west coast scenario editor of F. B. O.

Former M. P. Trade Editor Sees Big Independent Year

ACCORDING to George Blaisdell, widely known editor in motion picture trade circles, who is in close touch with activities in Hollywood as West Coast Production Manager for Rayart Pictures, the season of 1925-26 will be a big one for the Independents, if West Coast production activities in the Independent studios can be taken as any criterion.

Blaisdell states that all over Hollywood may be found Independent companies already at work on productions to be released in the early fall group.

Independents, according to Blaisdell, are preparing their largest schedule of release, and starting in early to get them ready for the market, in order that a campaign can be issued on the entire group at one time, and also that the independent exhibitor may know definitely just how many releases he can be assured of by independents.

"The Courageous Fool," fourth of the Rayart series of Harry J. Brown Productions, starring Reed Howes and directed by Albert Rogell, has been received from the Coast at the Rayart New York offices.

The story was written especially for Howes by Adele Buffington and important members of the cast in addition to the star are Ned Sparkes, well-known comedian, and Carmelita Geraghty, daughter of the dramatist-author-producer, Tom Geraghty.

Those who have seen "The Courageous Fool" say that it maintains the speed standard set by the first three Howes-Rayart releases.

Barker to Make "White Desert"

"The White Desert," a novel by Courtney Ryley Cooper, dealing with Colorado Lumber Camps has been decided upon for Reginald Barker's next Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production. The novel, published by Little, Brown & Company, was purchased by Irving Thalberg during his recent trip to New York.

The story concerns a lumberman who has schemed to gain control of his employer's fortune and lumber mill, and when the employer dies, leaving everything to his inexperienced son, a conspirator feels that the time is right for his plans. The events that follow make "The White Desert" one of the most exciting melodramas that have been brought to the screen.

Gerson Studios Speeding Work on Holt Productions

GERSON Picture Corporation, with studios at San Francisco, has planned an exceptional schedule of activity during the present series. At present work is being done under full headway on the series of Richard Holt productions under the direction of Duke Worne.

This series of thrilling comedy dramas will consist of eight feature productions during the year. Of these four have already been completed. "Ten Days," the initial production of the series, and "Too Much Youth" have been delivered to franchise holders. The third picture, "Going the Limit," is now being cut and titled and final scenes are being made of "The Canvas-Kisser," fourth of the Richard Holt series.

In each production Gerson Pictures has surrounded its new star with the best players available and such artists as Hazel Keener, Victor Potel, Sylvia Breamer, Ruth Dwyer, Joseph Girard, Hal Stephens, Eric Mayne, Harris Gordon, Charles N. French, Miriam Fouche are seen in this series of pictures.

Of the franchise holders of Gerson Pictures, numbering the most important independent exchanges in the country Renown Pictures, of New York, Buffalo and Albany have already released the first Richard Holt production, as have Progress Features of San Francisco, and Los Angeles. Richmount Pictures have obtained the rights to the entire world outside of the United States.

Critics in the trade have lauded the first of the new series of Richard Holt Productions.

Laurence Reid, in Motion Picture News, writes: "The direction keeps the interest alert through the compact interest which races along in good style and builds up the plot in first rate manner and adds several thrills. Richard Holt makes a pleasing appearance and it manages to sustain the attention through its collection of incident, thrills, romantic interludes—and the speed at which the action is maintained."

Charles S. Sewell in Moving Picture World writes: "There is a strong farcical note to this picture, with good comedy situations, and some straight character comedy. The different rescue scenes and the frame-ups of the publicity man provide opportunities for the introduction of melodrama and thrills and the romantic angle is pleasing. Richard Holt, the new star, makes a good impression. He has a pleasing personality, is an athletic, clean-cut chap and is thoroughly capable in the thrill and action scenes. 'Ten Days' is fast-moving, with plenty of pep, thrills, romance, comedy and melodrama."

Greater City Loew Houses Stand 'Em Up on "Greed"

ERICH VON STROHEIM'S "Greed" has shattered all records for attendance at four Loew Theatres in Brooklyn and New York. At the Metropolitan, Brooklyn; Lexington, American and Eighty-Third Street Theatres, New York, "Greed" has drawn the biggest receipts and the biggest attendance in the history of the theatres.

In Brooklyn, crowds jammed Fulton Street in front of the Metropolitan Theatre throughout the engagement, from the first show to the last, with the production proving itself the greatest sensation in photoplays ever presented in that city. Doors were compelled to be opened before time in order to accommodate the crowds that clamored for admittance.

At Loew's American in the Times Square theatrical district of New York, at Loew's Lexington and Loew's Eighty-third Street, "Greed" has registered smashing business. At the American Erich von Stroheim's sensational Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production drew the largest attendance and largest receipts ever known at this theatre since it has been under Loew management.

Remarkable business at these four Loew Theatres followed "Greed's" unusual popularity at the Capitol Theatre, New York, where it first played at popular prices following a run at the Cosmopolitan Theatre.

Tie-up for "Crossed Words"

A co-operative exploitation deal was arranged this week between Producers Distributing Corporation and Breau & Tobias, music publishers, wherein the popular song hit, "Crossed Words," and the coming Renaud Hoffman production, "Crossed Words," will be tied-up in a nation-wide advertising and publicity campaign. Special posters will be gotten out for window displays in department stores, song shops, phonograph stores and radio supply houses. In addition to these displays, Breau & Tobias, writers and publishers of the song, will broadcast the number from the big stations with mention of the picture in their announcements.

Custer's Next Production

"Galloping Vengeance" has been chosen as the title of Bob Custer's next Texas Ranger feature for Film Booking Offices, to be produced by Jesse Goldberg. Mary Beth Milford has been selected as Mr. Custer's leading lady and William Craft will direct.

Scenes from the Educational-Hamilton comedy, "Hooked," with Lloyd Hamilton doing the heavy work.

How to Use This Chart

First—Booking! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; spnee out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over—and under-length program.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and a fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Talks Foolishment

The following bon mot has reached my desk:

Finishing touches on what is regarded as a model new projection booth have been made in Fay's Theatre, Rochester, New York. Louis H. Friedman, architect and engineer of the office of O. W. Dwyer, designed the new booth and its electrical control apparatus. The wall openings are protected by five shutters, which are suspended by chains with fuseable links. Should a fire start in the booth, the melting of one link would drop all the shutters and confine the blaze to the booth.

Now who wrote that mess of nonsense? Presumably what some left-handed genius has attempted to tell us is that a new projection room has been planned by architect Friedman, in Fay's Theatre, Rochester, New York, and that the various ports are protected by fire shutters suspended by chains in such manner that the melting of one fuse will drop all shutters.

What Of It?

Well, what of it? That certainly is no new stunt. It has been done for years; also it does not necessarily spell one solitary thing in actual safety. Unless the fuses be so located that they will melt within two or three seconds of the starting of a fire, they have slight value. Unless they are thus located, and there is some means provided for removing from the projection ROOM (NOT "booth") all smoke and gas as fast as it forms, then the whole thing fails utterly, insofar as actual safety to audiences is concerned.

Will architects never understand that which has been told them by this department times almost without number, that merely confining the BLAZE to the projection room amounts to little, insofar as has to do with safety to human life. IT IS NOT THE BLAZE WHICH WORKS DEATH AND DESTRUCTION TO THE AUDIENCE, BUT THE WILD, UNREASONING FEAR AND PANIC WHICH SEIZES UPON THEM WHEN THEY SEE SMOKE POURING OUT AROUND THE CREVICES OF THE OBSERVATION AND OTHER PORTS, AND THE CRACKS AROUND THE DOOR.

Metallic Fuse Too Slow

A metallic fuse is ALTOGETHER TOO SLOW, even if rightly placed. A film fuse is the ONLY SAFE FUSE, and even that is not safe unless rightly placed.

As to the nomenclature used in the description, it is altogether possible that the architect had nothing to do with it. Probably some half-baked newspaper reporter was responsible. I imagine that what all this really means is that some new shutter dropping mechanism has been evolved. Well, surely we have a something more than ample abundance of them already; also a master cord and RIGHTLY PLACED AND RIGHTLY INSTALLED set of individual shutter cords are, except possibly in the matter of looks, just as good as anything I have ever seen, save and except the installation I described some time ago in Richmond, Virginia.

Possibly I have spoken rather roughly of this latest cub reporter effort, BUT I am weary of this eternal jumble of foolish terms, and still more foolish description. If architect Friedman really has evolved something of value we shall be glad to have an intelligent, understandable description of it, with "booth" "wall opening" (the door is a wall opening, and under this description would be equipped with "fire" shutters) and like misnomers translated into correct terms.

Bluebook School

Question No. 221—What faulty adjustment of the projector will increase the tendency of emulsion to deposit on tension shoes?

Question No. 222—Explain, in detail, why it is impractible to make a good film splice with the fingers alone—without register pins and a pressure clamp.

Question No. 223—What, in your judgment, is the correct width of a splice? Give reasons for your conclusions.

Question No. 224—Explain how you would proceed to make a splice in film. Don't be afraid to use space on this one. It is important.

Question No. 225—What effect has the use of too much cement?

A New One

Gosh! Who would have thought a theatre management would actually feature projection to the extent of sending out a letter praising it, together with a lengthy description of the projection room, a picture of the projectionist and a pass to the theatre—all by mail—to prospective patrons.

Who Did That?

The Lancaster Theatre, Boston, Mass., has done that lil' stunt. Not long ago the American Projectionist printed an excellent description of the projection room of the Lancaster Theatre, together with two views thereof, one view of the adjoining projectionists' rest room, and a photograph of Arthur Gray, Chief Projectionist. A general description of the 1,500 seat theatre itself was included, but the main thing, and the only thing illustrated, was the projection room and projectionists' rest room.

The Lancaster management had a re-print of this made, on a good grade of paper, and has sent it out as an advertising stunt, together with a pass to the show and the following letter:

The screen play has become popular with all classes of society, as an economical and satisfactory form of amusement, but many people complain that motion pictures tire their eyes. This effect is caused by poor or careless projection. The lack of proper ventilation and cleanliness also adds an element of discomfort in many theatres.

These faults do not exist at the Lancaster theatre. The old saying: "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," always remains true. We therefore take the liberty of enclosing an invitation to visit our theatre, and thus prove to yourself that we are justified in claiming the Lancaster to be the best motion picture theatre, in every particular, in all the City of Boston.

Invitation a Pass

The "invitation" takes the form of a pass, and I'll bet dollars to second hand peanut shells that the Lancaster "made business" by this stunt.

Slowly but surely the projection of motion pictures is advancing and is receiving recognition as an integral and important cog in the motion picture industry. Gone are the not-so-long-ago days when the theatre manager said, and really believed that: "A twelve year old boy c'n perject pictures after an hour's practice, just as well as anybody." Even the lowest type of theatre mis-manager (and we still have them with us) now agrees that he does need a man in the projection room, while real theatre managers—managers who are up with the times and are real showmen, not only want, but actually demand high grade skill, intimate knowledge and very careful work in their projection rooms.

P. S. I might add the remark that the Lancaster management pulled this stunt without the knowledge of its Chief Projectionist—or at least had it all ready to send out before he knew anything about it, therefore this featuring of projection and the projection room was absolutely voluntary on the part of the Lancaster theatre.

If only I could be a "southpaw" now, I'd be all right!

But I'm not. So, when the old right wing got filled up with inflamed nerves or some darn thing that hurts worse than hearing you fellows called "Operators," I simply had to lay back and take it easy.

This is no yell for sympathy. It's just to let you know why I haven't been able to answer letters and so on lately.

It's coming along all right, don't worry—just be patient if I don't answer your questions or handle your many good letters as quick as you think ought to be done.

F. H. RICHARDSON.

Bluebook Pleases

Walter Johnson, Projectionist Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois, in the course of a letter says: "Words cannot express how well I was pleased with the Bluebook."

Johnson ordered one some weeks ago. Every one of the many thousands who have bought the book seem to think they have made an excellent investment.

Bluebook School—Answers 191-195

Question No. 191—What would you consider as the maximum viewing angle of a metallic surface screen?

Walter Johnson, Champaign, Ill.; William Burnett, Newton, Iowa; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass.; P. E. Thomas, Creston, Iowa; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, S. D.; Allie Barron, Lodi, Calif.; Samuel F. Cooley, Manchester, Mass.; John Griffith, Ansonia, Conn.; Harold E. Hurlbutt, Oshkosh, Wis.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa, and Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Ontario, all made acceptable answers in the sense that they quoted what is generally accepted practice—or most of them did that anyhow. Bennewitz says:

The maximum efficient viewing angle of a metallic surface screen is twenty degrees from a point at right angles through the center of the screen surface. Beyond this point the reflecting power of the surface diminishes rapidly as the angle increases.

Thomas says:

Of twenty commercial metallic screen surfaces tested, six types were found to be efficient up to a maximum viewing angle of 20 degrees. Six other types are efficient up to 30 degrees, while three types are efficient at a maximum angle of 40 degrees and five at a maximum viewing angle of 50 degrees.

I have quoted Brother Thomas simply for the reason that I was and I think the rest of us will be, interested in knowing where he got his 50 degrees from—or even 40. Thomas' answers are usually very good, but I am afraid this time he got lost in the bushes.

John Griffith says:

The limiting maximum viewing angle of a metallic surface screen may be said to have been reached when the screen appears to be only one-fourth as bright as when viewed from the center line.

I don't know where John gets this from, but it is not so bad at that. Explanation yourself a little, Brother Griffith. Don't be so darned economical with ink. We want not only to know your conclusion, but in a matter of this kind, what your conclusion is based on.

Hanover reasons thusly:

It seems to me there is more than one thing concerned in this matter. According to the Bluebook tables I think we may conclude that the maximum viewing angle of a metallic surface screen is 30 degrees, or less. However, in practice it seems to me conditions in a given auditorium might be such that the 30 degree angle ought to be exceeded at the front and sides, in order to secure the added center brilliancy at the rear which a metallic surface screen gives. This would of course hold good only in a deep auditorium, in which some of the front side seats would be at a very wide angle to the screen.

Still another way of looking at this matter, it seems to me, would be that the viewing angles of a metallic surface screen could be called efficient so long as the average reflective power at the various angles is equal to the average reflective power of a diffusing screen, such as, for instance, paint or white plaster.

That last, it seems to me, is worthy of some consideration. Just now I am laid up with an acute attack of neuritis in the right arm, and while I hope this dictation gets by fairly well, still I am not in condition to concentrate very closely on anything.

Question No. 192—Describe a mirror screen. Name what you consider as their objectionable features, and tell us under what conditions you would recommend the purchase of a mirror screen.

Cooley, Burnett, Johnson, Moore, Baron, Griffith Hurlbutt, Hanover, Bennewitz, Daniel Constantino, Easton, Pa.; Thomas, Dobson and A. L. Fell, Collingswood, N. J., all made good on this one. I believe Thomas gives the answer most suitable for publicatio. He says:

A mirror screen consists of a sheet of plate glass, with a coating of quicksilver on the rear side, the front side or face being sandblasted, which latter may be done in varying degrees of roughness.

The mirror screen ranks highest of any among the commercial projection surfaces in reflective properties. One of its objectionable features is its low powers of diffusion. Mirror screens are not suitable for use where the maximum angle is much in excess of 20 degrees. This type of screen has a reflecting power ratio from the center or the zero angle to a 50 degree angle, of 13.18, which is approximately 3½ times greater than the limiting value or ratio of four. Furthermore, the reflecting power values at a viewing angle of 30 degrees is 60 per cent lower than at an angle of 20 degrees, which of course means a tremendous fadeaway.

Due to the thickness of the glass and the fact that the resultant reflection is partially from the face and partially from the back surface of the mirror, an out-of-focus effect, or double image, is present when the screen is viewed at a wide angle. A mirror screen is admirably adapted for use in a long, narrow auditorium.

To this Hanover, Dobson, Bennewitz and two or three others added the fact that the high cost, the liability of breakage, the possibility of the silver on the rear side decomposing and the impossibility of getting such a screen into many of the theatres without cutting a slot in the walls, were very valid objections to the use of the mirror screen.

Question 193—Would you consider the installation of a concave screen surface as advisable under any conditions? Give detailed reasons for your answer. We want to know what you know about the whole proposition.

Only Thomas, Griffith, Hanover, Moore, Bennewitz, Fell and Cooley came through on this one. I think Hanover gave the best all-around discussion of this subject. He says:

The concave screen was designed with the purpose of bringing all points of the screen equi-distant from the lens. In theory it is presumed to have a curvature equal to the curvature of a circle whose diameter would be two times the projection distance.

It is a well known fact that only highly corrected lenses will focus sharply at more than one distance from lens to image. Of course, if we measure from the face of a projection lens to the center of the screen, and from the face of the same lens to the edge of the screen, there will be an appreciable difference, which difference will be the difference between the arc of a circle whose radius is equal to the projection distance, and a straight line (the flat screen surface) which is at right angles to the axis of projection.

That is the theory of the thing, and a moment's study will convince us that it will only amount to an appreciable error where the projection distance is short, and the screen surface large. Therefore, the curved screen surface has no appreciable value except under that latter condition, and with the present advancement in the science of lens making it is quite entirely possible to make lenses which will take care of even the worst condition found in any theatre, under practical working conditions. We may therefore conclude that the curved screen surface has no practical value for theatre projection work.

I might go further and cite the fact that the curved screen surface sets up an additional viewing angle from the front side seats as regards one side of the screen. I think, however, I have shown conclusively that the curved surface has no place in projection work, so why go further?

Question No. 194—Give us your views as to the height the screen should be above the floor, under various conditions, and why it should be that height.

All those before named expressed their views on this question. Dobson says:

My opinion is that where there is a stage and the screen is against the back wall, the bottom of the screen should be just high enough so that patrons seated in the front row of seats can see the bottom of the picture. Where the screen is out near the front of the stage the same thing applies. In a theatre that has no stage, but has the screen in a permanent position, it would be my aim to so locate the screen that the effect of looking at a picture on the wall would be avoided.

Hanover says:

There are two major considerations; or perhaps I might say three, concerned in the height of the screen above the floor. First and most important is the sight lines. The screen must be so located that every portion of its surface is visible from every seat in the theatre. This, of course, is an element which varies largely in different theatres. The second consideration is to so locate the screen that the audience will not get the impression of viewing a "picture on the wall." The third consideration applies only to theatres with balconies. I think it is useless to try to set forth any rules, because of the fact that local conditions vary so widely.

Question No. 195—Give us your views as to what the outline of the picture ought to be, and what should govern the coloring of the various things immediately surrounding it.

Everybody before named answered this one, with considerable variation as to the matter of ideas.

Dobson says:

The picture outlined should be a good dulled non-gloss material, preferably velvet, because velvet will not show where the picture overlaps on the material; also it will not reflect the picture light back to the audience. A dark picture border causes the picture to stand out with increased brilliancy. There should be enough black surrounding the picture so that the patron who watches the screen will not notice any change from the brilliantly lighted picture and the dull border that surrounds the same. By this I mean that there should be no perceptible change in the colors surrounding the screen, so that the patron's eye will not be subconsciously noticing the changes in the border.

Griffith says:

The screen should be surrounded with a dead black border extending in two inches over the image. This border should be at least two feet wide. The rest of the screen and its immediate surroundings should be made to harmonize with the general decoration plan of the house, provided no colors be used that will be noticeably visible during the projection of the picture.

None of the answers to this question have quite met with my own approval, and being, as I told you, quite ill, I don't feel able myself to discuss the matter at any considerable length.

A. C. Dope

C. A. Anglemire, Projectionist, Nazareth, Pa., says:

With regard to letter from Fred Allard, Projectionist Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas, I have this to offer:

Have been projecting with A. C. at the arc for six years. Have never used a D. C. arc at all. Am using 5/8 White A. C. Special carbons, using current from Powers Inductor which will deliver a maximum of 65 amperes and a minimum of 45.

Friend Allard complains that his White A. C. Special carbons pencil for about two inches. Something queer about that. Either his carbons don't make good contact with the lamp jaws, or else I'm not getting the current I am supposed to, for I have no penciling at 65 unless the carbons make poor contact with jaws. Have found that such poor contact will not only induce penciling, but also it will cause noise.

I have tried both the regular D. C. set, as shown page 404 of Bluebook, and the "jack knife" set. Find that I get a much better crater, and that it faces the collector lens at a more efficient angle with the jack knife set than with the D. C. set.

The only trouble with the "jack knife" set is, so far as I can see, that when I feed the carbons together, the darned arc "travels" around the carbon tips, which causes a momentary shadow on the screen, and say, Richardson, the above is sufficient tribulation, but if one feeds his carbons together real slowly he can eliminate the trouble.

More Dope

I believe that if I had Cinephor condensers I could use the regular D. C. set very satisfactorially. With present condensers I get a larger spot with the jack knife, as I can get the crater nearer the collector lens than with the D. C. set. (Pull your lamphouse back further.—Ed.) Would like to hear from some of the other chaps using A. C. at the arc and get their viewpoints on things, as it looks as though I will have to use A. C. for quite a spell yet.

Helped instal a Mazda equipped Powers, with Aspheric condensers, in the local High School recently, and learned quite a bit about Mazda. The theatre where I work is well suited for Mazda, as the projection distance is short and we use a small picture. Friend Boss is watchfully waiting to see how it works out in the school.

More About A. C.

Reverting to A. C., I was away from the theatre six months. Projection was in charge of an inexperienced man, and the arcs made a great deal of noise. When I returned I investigated to see what was the cause. Found the carbons not clamped very tightly in jaws and the carbon jaws very dirty and slightly pitted. Cleaned jaws thoroughly, clamped carbons in tight and Mr. Noise folded its tent and vamoosed. Always keep a few carbons in bottom of lamphouse, so they are thoroughly dried out before using. Think that also tends to keep down the noise. Gained consent of manager to run a slide before each show as follows: "Projection in this theatre in charge of Carlisle A. Anglemier."

Yes, brother Anglemier, and I'll bet ten dollars to a plugged nickel that after your name has appeared on the screen you're dad balmed careful that no faults appear that you can possibly avoid. That's just the plain logical conclusion.

Discussion

As nearly as I can understand you, you yourself believe the D. C. set is best, only you cannot get the crater close enough to the collector lens except by using the jack knife set. I don't see, though, just why you think you could get it any closer by using the Cinephor. The Cinephor has a 4½ inch diameter collector lens (plano convex) just as has the ordinary condenser. Have you tried giving your lamp itself less angle? Also do you actually know just what your crater distance OUGHT to be? Not much more than two inches, I think. Send me the impressions of three or four UPPER carbon craters, made by pressing the point of the stub down on paper under which a blotter has been laid, so as to get a clear impression of the crater rim. I am curious to know just what you really ought to have. Your remark about a "large spot" leads me to believe you haven't quite got the right idea. When you send the crater impressions, also set your lamp at the least angle you think practical, and tell me what is the least crater distance (crater to face of collector lens) you can get.

As to Mazda, you tell your boss from me that he can get excellent results with Mazda on short projection distance, projecting a not-too-large picture—say not more than sixteen feet, BUT that he must have and maintain a good screen surface. Make a drawing of your theatre, giving distance screen to front and to back rows of seats, and width of seating space. I will then tell you what sort of screen you ought to have.

Silly Ass

Not by way of excuse, but merely in explanation, I will say that since the editor had his "bean" split open in an automobile accident three or four years ago, every once in a while his alleged brain pulls a queer one.

A few weeks ago I made certain commendatory remarks concerning the "Luxalba" plano convex condenser, which is fully guaranteed against breakage. At the same time I remarked that while the sponsors of Luxalba had submitted the lenses to this department for trial, and that they were subjected to a thorough and very trying test and approved, certain other makers of condensers had not seen fit to take a similar course, hence we could neither commend or condemn them.

And here is the "bull." I included the makers of "Pyrex" condensers in this letter. Now I knew full well that "Luxalba" is merely a trade name for condensers made from Pyrex glass, hence they are, in fact, pyrex condensers, but the alleged editorial brain slipped a cog, and I made a what our friends the natives fo Old England would called a "silly ass" of myself. Well, it's not the first time, nor, I suppose, will it be the last. One just simply has to pull a boner once in a while, or one would be too darned good to be true.

Another One

Recently I asked a manufacturer of one of the low intensity (reflector type) lamps to advise me as to what focal length mirrors they supplied. They sent the data by mail, and since it came from a manufacturer, I accepted it without critical examination, printed it, and THEN observed that something was decaying in Denmark with that bit of dope. Just about the time I got wise to it, the following note came from Lester Bowen, Designing Engineer of the Nicholas Power Company:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I note, January 17 issue, under title "Focal Lengths," that the focal length of the reflectors of the Morelite Reflector Arc Lamps are given as 6½, 7½ and 8½ inches, respectively, to be used for short, medium and long projection distances.

Apparently there has been a misunderstanding, and in place of focal lengths being given, the radius of curvature is referred to. A 7½ inch focal length reflector would be much too long, unless it were used in combination with a condenser, and I know that the Morelite does not use a condenser.

Thanks

Many thanks, Lester. Right you are, and while it was not primarily my mistake, still it became mine when I permitted it to go before our readers as fact. I'm offering no excuses—merely asking our readers to consider the great variety of things treated of in this department, and the relatively few errors therein contained.

Projectionist?

Jack Levine, Projectionist Rialto Theatre, Leominster, Mass., sends in a clipping from a trade paper, which he says he is glad is not the Moving Picture World. It reads: "At Liberty, Projectionist and Electrician; handle any make projector; keep it in good order; do repairing; help with bill posting and around theatre. State salary.

Brother Levine remarks the following remarks concerning this modest offer:

What do you think of attached clipping? This chap is positively lazy and, I think, inclined to renig. To the duties he so ungrudgingly and charitably volunteers, he should, I think, have added at least the following: am willing to stoke the furnace in winter; keep the floors neatly scrubbed; dust the seats off and take tickets until time for the show to start. Am willing to raise a set of whiskers and stand in men's lounge during intermission to allow patrons to use them to dry their hands on, thus saving towels. Could keep the cuspidors cleaned and polished, and black all the theatre employees shoes. I might mention that my hair grows very luxuriantly, and should be useful for stuffing worn places in the upholstery. I could, of course, keep the lawn of the Boss' residence mowed in summer, and sweep the sidewalks around both theatre and residence, scrubbing them once each week; also, as I do not need much sleep, I might be able to do the family wash and freeze the ice cream when the Boss' wife gives a party. On rainy days I would be quite willing that my clothes, except the trousers and shirt I must wear, be used as a theatre door mat, thus saving the floors. Of course any other things you might wish me to do would be done with the utmost cheerfulness. I am a projectionist, and trust you will consider my application favorably.

Does Not Agree

P. L. Krone, Projectionist Strand Theatre, Laurel, Montana, heaves his honored headgear into the ring in the cue sheet, punch hole change-over argument, using the following type of heave:

This is my second time to butt into the department, which, however, I read every chance I get. In Dec. 20 issue I see where you are trying to get the film exchanges to make change-over cue sheets. (You're wrong there, brother. I'm trying to get the PROJECTIONIST to do that li'l' stunt himself instead of ruining anywhere from one to ten feet of film every reel.—Ed.)

I have been engaged in projection for fifteen years, and I do NOT agree with you on the cue sheet matter. Of course I am not trying to force my own views upon any one—merely expressing my own opinion as to what I think is best, which is a change-over signal.

Now Brother (as I may call you) Richardson, you know as well as I do that there are only about one third of the men engaged in projection today who really are motion picture projectionists. The rest are just what they claim to be—machine operators and some of them, I am sorry to say, are only would-be operators.

This cue sheet stunt you advocate MAY work, but I have very fair sized doubts about. The one third who are really projectionists may make it work, but the other 66 2/3 per cent. (machine operators) won't even be able to understand it.

I have handled films from many exchanges in my many years of projection work, and what you say about damaged films is RIGHT. As to punch holes; why I have seen as many as fourteen of them in three feet of film.

In my opinion, the only right change-over signal is the one used by the Paramount. It is a fade-out and fade-in at the end of each reel. Provided there be no other fade-out and fade-in too near the reel end is a perfect change over.

And now a question: What is it causes my arc to throw off small, black grit, which cause blisters on the collector lens? Use a 50 volt Transverter, 5/23 Silver tip below and 5/8 cored above. Forty amperes. Crater distance three inches. Condenser to film plate sixteen inches from condenser to film plate. Four inches back focus. Let me know what you think of my opinion, and of my butting in.

In the first place, this department belongs to YOU, and to all those other men engaged in motion picture projection. I am merely its editor. You cannot possibly "butt in" to that which is YOURS. Those who don't take active part in its work are the ones to be criticized.

As to the arc, brother Krone, why don't you use correct names for the things in use in your profession? I presume you of course meant to say you use a 5/32, and not a 5/23 Silvertip. "Arc to condenser, three inches." Of course I know what you really mean is that the CRATER DISTANCE (the distance crater to face of collector lens) is three inches. The condenser is about two to two and a half inches thick, and "to condenser" COULD mean face of collector lens or optical center of the condenser. USE CORRECT WORDING, CORRECT TERMS. The same thing applies to your "Condenser to film plate." What you mean is that "distance Y" is 16 inches—distance from face of converging lens to aperture. There is no such thing as a "film plate" so far as I know.

The "black grit" is unvolatized carbon. It probably is not what causes the pitting of the face of the collector lens. That, I think, is mostly due to metal particles from the negative carbon. It is a fault of such carbons, but most projectionists think their advantages are sufficient to offset the pitting fault. The "grit" may be made worse—more of it—if your carbons are not thoroughly dried before using. Keep half a dozen of them in the bottom of the lamphouse all the time, or better still, fix a rack on top of the lamphouse and keep a bundle there all the time.

If you will send me the following data I will be glad to advise you as to just what you ought to have. (A) Make impressions of three or four of your craters by pressing them down on paper so as to make a clear impression of the rims thereof. (B) What is the smallest free diameter of your projection lens, and (C) what is the exact distance from face of aperture plate tracks to rear surface of projection lens—working distance of projection lens.

As to the cue sheet matter, any man who has intelligence enough to have any place at all in any projection room ought to be able to understand a cue sheet, and to make one, if he really tries. The trouble with the ones you speak of is not that they cannot, but that they are just plain too d - - - - d LAZY to make any real effort, or do anything they can side-step.

The fade out—fade in is an excellent stunt; also so is a sub title at the end and beginning of each reel, BUT the difficulty is to get the producer (who really seems not to care one single tinker's damn about the possibilities of perfect showing of his productions upon the screen) to adopt and carry out so comparatively simple a plan as either the fade out-fade in, or the sub-title-with-half-on-each-reel stunt. Either stunt would give even the most confirmed film butcher small excuse for continuing his outrages.

THE value and importance of correct theatre seating and the strong influence of comfortable and artistic theatre chairs in winning public favor, have been somewhat overlooked in the past. As manufacturers and distributors of theatre seating, we have naturally been restrained from stressing its importance too much because it would be construed as selfish and interested in motive.

There is no doubt, however, but that the tendency in the theatre world in the last few years has been overwhelmingly toward greater and greater luxuriousness in theatre interiors and to more cultural and esthetic refinements in theatre equipment.

This movement has in fact become so firmly established as now to be a thing universally accepted by the theatre going public. Luxury and comfort are now quite taken for granted. The public in its subconscious mind has come to expect elegance, comfort and beauty in the surroundings of the theatre and playhouse, and it can not be fully satisfied with anything less.

It has no doubt been this urge for beauty, luxury and perfect ease in the theatre that influenced over 500 theatre managers during 1924 to secure from us new seating for their theatres, insisting on chairs artistic in design, thoroughly comfortable also to sit in, and harmonizing with surroundings.

Where desired, the reseating was accomplished by us without the interruption of business for a single day. In many instances, too, reseating not only meant a decided improvement in the attractiveness of the entire theatre, but by skillful rearrangement of the seating, an increase in seating capacity was secured as well.

Our Theatre Seating Engineering Department is at your service for expert counsel and advice without obligation at any time.

Carbon Troubles

This department hesitates to give publicity to carbon troubles. It very well knows that all carbon makers are striving to produce the best possible electrode and that most of the product IS good. It also very well knows that carbon troubles may very well be due, either wholly or in part, to wrong procedure in the matter of taking care of the carbons after they are received. Carbon absorbs moisture like a sponge. In the very nature of things, the maker cannot guarantee that his goods won't contain a very considerable degree of moisture when they reach the consumer, or that they will not be so stored that they will absorb moisture after they are received, AND MOISTURE IN CARBONS IS ONE OF THE FINEST LITTLE RAISERS OF TROUBLE THAT I KNOW OF.

I have told you many, many, many, many times to subject carbons to a considerable degree of heat FOR AT LEAST TWENTY-FOUR HOURS BEFORE THEY ARE USED. ALSO STORE THEM IN A DRY PLACE. Some of you do these things—more of you just plain don't. But you ALL kick like the devil when the moisture YOU are responsible for being there raises the Old Harry with your light.

Here are some excerpts from a letter from W. C. Budge, Projectionist Comedy Theatre, Jamaica, Long Island. He says, in part:

Am handling you some carbon stubs and a lot of ends which have dropped off the positive carbon when I strike the arc with a burned carbon. These latter are from ——— carbons.

One of the stubs is a ———; the rest ———. I certainly had the time of my young and unsophisticated life with those ——— carbons. They have a tendency to freeze, and when they do the negative gathers a large ball on the end and I get all the colors of the rainbow on friend screen. I also note that when I extend the carbons out about two inches from the holder, they want to freeze, and when I start off in the afternoon I have to feed by hand to keep them from freezing. I tried the ——— and had no such trouble. You will note that the ——— negative is 1/32 larger than the ——— negative. Also I got a much better light from the ———. The samples are all from the same lamp, therefore they worked under the same conditions. Am at a loss to understand the crater dropping off, but they often do with the ———. This occurs either as soon as the carbons touch, or from three to five seconds thereafter.

Have a Stellarc lamp, installed in a Type S Simplex lamphouse. Use from 12 to 13 amperes of current. Think it would be a good plan to warn all those using the low intensity (reflector type) lamp to watch their step when buying carbons.

With the low intensity lamp variation in line voltage is a very serious matter indeed. Your light becomes very poor when the voltage drops, and the automatic feed goes flooey real pronto. If you have variable voltage you are certainly in for trouble. I attach some cue sheets of mine. Doubtless you will smile at them. They would never do for general use, as a code book would have to be supplied with them. My idea in sending them is to show how much one can get on a small piece of paper, and that and a pencil is all that is needed for a cue sheet.

Wrong, brother Budge. Ambition to make one, plus the intelligence necessary to do it. Very many machine attendants (operators) seem to lack one or the other—I wonder which it is. Variation in supply voltage is a very serious matter, regardless of what light source you may be using, but with low intensity it is especially bad, because a drop of even three or four amperes is a whale of a lot when you are only perhaps using a total total of around fifteen amperes.

The carbon tips breaking off is very bad indeed. Carbons which do that, if the fault is inherent in the carbon, are unfit for use for projection. The samples (fifteen or twenty of them) sent, show the breakage to be just back of the crater, a scant one eighth of an inch of the end of the carbon breaking off. Are you sure your carbons are perfectly dry before use? I am unable to see any reason why a dry carbon should put up such a performance as that.

The Reason

My reason for the publication of this minus names of the carbons, is to permit those of you who may have experienced similar trouble to advise us of that fact. If a sufficient number have had the same troubles with the same make of carbon—low intensity lamps particularly—then we may assume such carbons to have a very serious inherent fault, and I will take the matter up with the manufacturer immediately. If the carbons are found to be at fault, as a matter of plain justice, I will publish the name of the offending carbon. That seems fair enough, but it would NOT be fair to publish names on just one, or even on a few complaints.

The cue sheets are all right, and prove that you observe the action closely. I make the point-blank assertion that any man fit to be in a projection room at all can very quickly learn to make a cue sheet, if he really wants to and tries.

Later: Sent a carbon copy of above and have received a note saying that Brother Budge has dried his positives thoroughly but not negatives. Both should be dried, but of course the positive is most important in that matter; also moisture in negative could hardly cause breakage of positive.

"Show Ign'runce"

F. H. Moore, Projectionist Strand Theatre, Taunton, Mass., in the course of a letter says:

Well, anyhow, here's hoping for prosperity for yourself and the "Bluebook School," which I feel certain is doing much good. Many of the men are, as you say, studying it, but here is the way I looked at it: If I want to learn, and get the greatest amount of good out of it, I'll have to just simply "show my ignorance," which means lack of knowledge. This of course is embarrassing, but if we do our part we will win out in the end.

Correct, brother Moore. The man who doesn't know has no need to feel ashamed or embarrassed, provided he really is trying to remedy the deficiency. The chap who should feel ashamed is the one who doesn't know, and doesn't give Adam whether he does or not, so long as the union is able to "get him the money" anyhow. That fellow is a SLACKER. He is a slacker to his profession, a slacker to his employer and a SLACKER TO HIS UNION, which, incidentally, he is a disgrace to, and which his inefficient work tends to bring into disrepute.

Film Damage?

What's the Real Cause?

By F. H. RICHARDSON

The photographs accompanying this article were supplied by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. They were made in the studios of that corporation, by Earl Dennison, who wrote the caption.

Mr. Dennison says in regard to Plate No. 20: Notched and V'd film. This is very bad practice, and greatly weakens the perforations. Also causing the film to tear easily.

What Mr. Dennison says is, I think only partly true, I feel obliged to take issue with him to the extent that the film is very much more apt to tear if it is used with the film edge cracked clear through to the sprocket hole and un-notched. I say this because of the fact that under this condition the broken edge is very likely to, and as any projectionist can testify, does catch on sprocket idlers, causing a more or less bad tear, or even a long split in the film.

If Mr. Dennison means that all film in which any crack or cracks in the film edge may occur which extend through to the sprocket hole, ought to be removed and replaced by new film, I must again take issue with his conclusion. Always provided a film notching plyer or be used on in some other manner a notch such as is shown at E E E E be made, I cannot see that the film has been in any way weakened as against the un-notched crack, though such notching as is shown at A, B. C. and D certainly is worse than the original damage it was proposed to benefit. This is especially true at A. and C. Such notching is worse than none at all, and is unsafe for projection.

Theoretically any film in which the film edge is cracked so that the crack extends from outer edge of film to sprocket hole ought to be removed, and new film substituted. In practice, however, this is, in my opinion, neither feasible nor desirable, always provided the crack be carefully notched as per E. E. E. E. My reason for this conclusion is that individual cracks often occur which may be anywhere from six inches to ten feet apart. To remove this film and make substitution of new film would be what our Quebecian brother would term "Not so good" for the following reasons: first, if such cracks occur say one every three or four feet, then if only the frame where the crack occurs is removed, there will be a splice added for each crack, and that is a thing the average man would object to, and with excellent reason. Second, if the film be an old one, and a lot of new sections be put in, the effect would not be very good. Thirdly, and last, carefully notched sprocket holes may, and probably will run for quite a while. They are far safer than the un-notched hole, and I personally never have known of a single-hole notch, righly made, causing any trouble at all. But even if it should, the tear would certainly not be any worse than would be caused by an un-notched hole.

It is of course understood that my comments and recommendations apply ONLY to one-hole notches, and to notches very carefully made as per E. E. E. E. A notch taking in more than one hole, or a notch carelessly or wrongly made, is highly objectionable. Mr. Dennison's conclusions, as applied to them, are, in my opinion, absolutely correct.

PLATE NO 21

PLATE 21

Mr. Dennison says: Results of notching and V'ing.

Comment unnecessary, except to remark that Mr. Dennison should have said "Results of wrong notching and V'ing."

I do not like to disagree with Mr. Dennison. He is an able gentleman, and his opinions concerning matters of film damage certainly are entitled to the highest consideration and respect. However, no man was ever born or woman who is entirely right all the time, and in this particular thing I believe Mr. Dennison has to some extent erred. I would like the opinion of the Eastman Company as to this matter.

Home of Power's

This job of being Projection Editor of the Moving Picture World, Author of the Blue-book, lecturer, toastmaster at projectionist dinners, and all 'round confidential adviser and trouble shooter for projectionists, exhibitors, and to some extent the entire motion picture industry, keep me fairly busy. Also I have a few other interests, and a few pleasures, to say nothing of a friend daughter who is my pal and who demands some undivided attention.

However, I have been on intimate terms with hard work all the years of my life, so usually I manage to get through a busy day without serious difficulty.

I well remember one strenuous time of training in the school of Hard Work, when I traveled either the whole or a part of each day, looked over a lot of theatres every evening and spoke after midnight practically every night for more than five whole months. Golly, but that WAS work, but I enjoyed every day of it, and was warmly welcomed every place I stopped. Projectionists were not so far advanced then as now, and in my talks it was very often necessary to set forth some truths which were "not so pleasant." Notwithstanding that, however, I enjoyed the work, and had many delightful experiences.

Recently I told you of a visit Arthur Gray, of Boston, and our old college chum John Griffith, Ansonia, Conn., made to New York, and of our attendance to the American Projection Society meeting on January 22. I did not, however, comment upon the four very pleasant and profitable hours which Gray, Griffith and myself spent at the factory of the Nicholas Power Company by invitation of that corporation.

We were shown the new research laboratory and projection room, planned by Lester Bowen, Designing Engineer for the company, and spent some time examining into, experimenting with and discussing (NO! NOT cussing! I distinctly said dis-cussing) certain phases of the projector optical train as used in conjunction with the high intensity arc light source. The results of our deliberations will be set forth in this department a little later.

I think I may best express myself with regard to this visit by quoting from the letter written by Arthur Gray to P. A. McGuire, Advertising Manager Nicholas Power Company, which reads thusly:

My Dear Mr. McGuire: I would think myself indeed ungrateful if I failed to thank you for the hospitality, and the interesting and very instructive hours afforded me on the occasion of my recent visit to your plant. We were all a bit rushed and in retrospect it seems to me I did not convey to you a full sense of my appreciation.

I have been, for some time, aware of the progressive attitude your company has been taking toward the profession of motion picture projection, but was agreeably surprised to learn the extent to which you had been carrying on. The spirit of "better projection" just sticks out all over every one of the chaps I met at your establishment, and I'll say it is mighty encouraging, now that I am back home, to know and realize what a strong ally the thinking projectionists of this country and Canada have in the Nicholas Power Company.

My heartiest wishes for the success of your campaign for better projection because upon this and other similar efforts depends the future welfare of every projectionist who is qualified to hold a position as such.

And now I want to pay a merited tribute. It was P. A. McGuire who really planned this visit, and who acted as Master of Ceremonies at the luncheon arranged by the company.

McGuire is entitled to commendation for the work he has done while holding the position as Advertising Manager for the Power Company. He has succeeded in putting real pep into his advertising, without making it in any way controversial. He has handled his material well, both from the technical and from the strictly advertising viewpoint, or so it seems to me.

As an advertising man he has had the wisdom to understand that he must sense the mental reactions of the users of his goods, and not over-play his hand.

Another point in Mac's favor is that he gets out and mingles with the actual users of the goods he is trying to sell. He attends the lecture meetings of the American Projection Society, for instance, and is present at various other entertainments and activities of New York City projectionists.

I myself know what it means to work hard all day, and then be among those present at the social and other affairs of projectionists, which never begin before midnight, and often end when the church spires are gilded by the morning sun. I therefore can sympathize with "Mac." However, I also know the good that may be accomplished in this way, and believe his hard work and energy ought to be recognized and commended—which is the reason for this article.

"Mac" is always an enthusiastic Power booster, but just now is expending a lot of space the Power Company pays good coin for in specializing on "BETTER PROJECTION PAYS"—a motto this department has had nailed to the mast for fifteen years.

McGuire is "one of the boys", also he is a family man, with a fine home, a squaw and four papooses (calls em wife and children) out on Long Island.

Left to right, the men are P. A. McClure, Advertising Manager, N. Power Company; Mr. Elms, President Widescope Camera Company; Claude Myers, Assistant Sales Manager, N. Power Company (he is NOT standing on a soap box); John Griffith, whom you all know. Next comes an object purporting to be F. H. Richardson, though I think I'll disown it; then comes Arthur Gray, Projectionist, Lancaster Theatre, Boston; Lester Bowen, Designing Engineer, N. Power Company; and Arthur Schulze, Engineering Department, N. Power Company. Each individual of the group holds interest for the projectionist, and I'm sure you will all be glad to form their photographic acquaintance, and that you would all like to shake hands with them.

Silly Practice

From a mid-western city comes a letter, which reads, in part, as follows:

Dear Sir and Brother—I want to thank you for the help received from you in answer to my recent letter. Some of the boys may knock the department, but nevertheless in time of need it seems to be a d*d good place to go.

The "knock-the-department" habit is going out of fashion quite fast. Men are learning what a silly HABIT it really is. They are learning that this department is the one best friend they have, outside the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. itself.

Of course there still remains a percentage of the men who learned to knock the department years ago, and they just simply can't break the HABIT. Oh well, we should make a worryment! It amuses them, hurts no one but themselves, and it is always possible they will find some other, better source of amusement bye and bye. So that's that.

"The Beloved Bozo;" two comical crooks, a stolen rope of pearls, two of which are genuine; a pretty girl, a fire, and action as fast as a machine gun. Lots of laughs in this one and real originality.

"The Plumber;" paying a plumber's bill, is usually no joke. This plumber is one. The comedy plumbs depths of comedy heretofore unplumbed. If your audience doesn't go plumb daffy with laughing, turn out the lights and go home; for they're all asleep.

Two fast-stepping comedies sure to give the utmost in satisfaction.

facts about—

"RECOMPENSE"

ROBERT KEABLE'S Sensational Sequel to "SIMON CALLED PETER"

The Story—

No story in years has burned its way more deeply into the minds of the reading public. No characters in modern fiction are better known than those in "Recompense."

"Recompense" was written in response to insistent public demand after Mr. Keable's "Simon Called Peter" had created a sensation throughout the English-speaking world.

The forbidden love affair between Peter , a minister, and Julie, Red Cross nurse and one of the most interesting products of the chaotic social conditions brought about by the World War, absolutely required further exposition.

In "Simon Called Peter" Mr. Keable had developed perfectly logical situations which were startling in the extreme. In "Recompense," with the same characters—and a few added when the locale of the story switched from France to South Africa—he gave to current fiction a new set of situations, equally logical, and tremendously more startling—and daring.

PRODUCTIONS, Inc.

Person

ASSEMBLED under the banner of Producers Distributing Corporation are producing organizations, embracing studios and units equipped with every modern facility for the production of high class motion pictures.

At the head of these organizations stand men—not mere figures—but personalities of definite and distinctive merit in the cinema realm—men who have proved their ability to gauge and anticipate the public demand in screen entertainment, and whose experience and records of achievement in the creation of outstanding box-office attractions are a guarantee that releases on the schedule of Producers Distributing Corporation will be marked by a high degree of artistic and dramatic quality.

While the independent functioning in this assembly of great producers makes for the highest development of each individual unit, yet each finds the fulfillment of his aims through the medium of Producers Distributing Corporation, which because of its unique position, unhampered by personal interest in any production, insures the rendering of impartial service to producer and exhibitor alike.

AL CHRISTIE

In the realm of comedy, Al Christie's genius predominates. He has been called the king of comedy and he holds undisputed sway. Current productions on the program of Producers Distributing Corporation are "HOLD YOUR BREATH" and "RECKLESS ROMANCE." Coming releases are "STOP FLIRTING," and the sensational laugh special, "CHARLEY'S AUNT," with Syd Chaplin.

A.H. SEBASTIAN

A keen and almost uncanny knowledge of what the public likes and how to get it for them characterizes A. H. Sebastian, who made a sensational bid for fame with the screen version of Aaron Hoffman's great stage success, "WELCOME STRANGER." Mr. Sebastian has given a vivid demonstration of his unusual ability in his acquisition of Weber and Fields to play the feature roles in "FRIENDLY ENEMIES."

RENAUD HOFFMAN

The manner in which Renaud Hoffman presents his unusual stories on the screen is reminiscent of the simplicity and pathos of Robert Burns, the vigor of Richard Harding Davis and the subtle psychology of Guy de Maupassant. Current productions are "NOT ONE TO SPARE" and "THE LEGEND OF HOLLYWOOD." For the spring season "ON THE THRESHOLD" and "CROSSED WORDS."

FRANK WOODS

Frank Woods' knowledge of screen technique, combined with his marked ability to define and express human emotions, makes him a dominant factor in the production of real box-office attractions. Current releases are "CHALK MARKS," a heart-tugging drama, and "LET WOMEN ALONE," with Pat O'Malley and Wanda Hawley. Coming, "BEAUTY AND THE BAD MAN," by Peter B. Kyne.

CHARLES H. CHRISTIE

Behind the lofty ideals and substantial business ability and integrity of the Christie Film Company looms the personality of Charles H. Christie, business manager. Although identified with the business activities of the organization, Charlie Christie has a comedy sense second to none except his brother Al, and his judgment of the picture value of a story has had much to do with the fame of the Christie name.

CHARLES R. ROGERS

In addition to his association with Stromberg in the production of high-powered photoplays, Mr. Rogers is also affiliated in the presentation to the public of the Renaud Hoffman series of picturizations. Mr. Rogers' keen analytical judgment and his exceptional knowledge of motion picture values is assurance of the utmost in screen entertainment.

HUNT STROMBERG

Youth, energy, vision, and a keen understanding of what the public wants are just a few of the elements that make up the personality of this young producing genius of filmland. "Personally supervised by Hunt Stromberg" is a gilt-edge guarantee of a real showmanship production. The new Harry Carey series of action dramas, and the colorful Priscilla Dean productions are glowing testimony to his ability.

ELMER HARRIS

A brilliant career in every branch of the dramatic art and a mastery of technical details, gained in the hard school of experience, are guarantees that Elmer Harris brings to the art of motion picture production an ability of unusual caliber. Current releases are "THE WISE VIRGIN" and "THE GIRL ON THE STAIRS." His contribution for the spring season will be a picturization of Ina Claire's great stage success, "THE AWFUL TRUTH," starring Agnes Ayres.

JOHN GRIFFITH WRAY

The guiding hand of the group of productions bearing the name Regal Pictures is John Griffith Wray. Mr. Wray has been a player of many parts —actor, director, manager, producer. Regal productions are "BARBARA FRIETCHIE," "THE HOUSE OF YOUTH," "ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE," "THE CHORUS LADY," "THE MIRAGE," and "THE GIRL OF GOLD."

MEMO TO MR. WELSH

THIS is really nothing to shout about, since I suppose a Circulation Department should be accurate and complete in all its figures and information.

BUT IT IS THE FIRST TIME THAT THIS HAS HAPPENED IN THE MOTION PICTURE FIELD! To the best of my knowledge, the first time in any field.

So I believe you will be interested.

The paid exhibitor circulation of Moving Picture World—as certified by the Auditor's Report of the Audit Bureau of Circulations about to be issued—agrees TO THE DOT with the figures which we presented in our Publisher's Statement.

The Auditor's Report follows weeks of exhaustive examination of our records, together with the sending of hundreds of letters to our subscribers.

This is a tribute to the QUALITY of Moving Picture World's circulation; to the painstaking care taken in SECURING subscriptions and in RECORDING them; and says louder than words:

We are proud of Moving Picture World's circulation!

We have nothing to fear from any sort of examination, any sort of comparison—ANYWHERE or at ANY TIME.

Following close on Mr. Sydney S. Cohen's advice to exhibitors TO MOBILIZE THEIR PLAY DATES for protection against theatre-owning distributor-producer combinations, independent exhibitors are speaking their pieces. Mr. Cohen said:

> "Let the independent theatre owner remember that every play date given to a producer-distributor-exhibitor film company, adds a brick to some theatre that will be built or acquired in competition to him or some other independent theatre owner."

My hat's off to those who paid tribute to Vitagraph in the Exhibitors' Trade Review, issue of February 21.

And I thank Willard C. Howe, editor of the Trade Review.

Vitagraph is not a competitor of the theatre owner—it operates no theatres—it controls no man's entertainment.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada know this as do the independent exhibitors in the United States. At a meeting of the M. P. T. O. in Toronto, February 10, this resolution was adopted.

> Be it resolved: That the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada, in session, Tuesday, February 10th, at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, does heartily endorse and support the policy of Vitagraph in withdrawing from the Producers' and Distributors' Organization, commonly known as the Hays' Organization, and offers to the president, Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph, its sincerest congratulations. It is further resolved, that the members of the M. P. T. O. of Canada support to their fullest extent the Vitagraph company for the integrity of this action; and for the many expressions of business friendship which it has displayed toward the M. P. T. O. of Canada, in its endeavor to maintain the Independence of the Film Industry.

The Editor's Views

FROM week to week the wonder recurs to us—what do photoplay fans think of metropolitan picture criticism in many of its examples? We feel that there is a subject for a Briggs cartoon there—or, perhaps, there would be more inherent humor in a strip called, "What a daily newspaper critic thinks of while watching the screen."

We wonder, and the problem grows vexatious, Do some of the critics spend their time wondering how long it will be before their vaunted superior intellects will earn them a job on some scenario staff? Perhaps the critic feels that the reader is interested in learning just how much HE knows about the inside photographic tricks of picture making. More likely the job of photoplay critic is merely a post-graduate in college English, an opportunity to show how cute, clever, and cynical a bright young man can be.

New York has its Quinn Martin; Chicago its Mae Tinee.

And weekly the wonder grows on us that newspapers of outstanding fairness and sincerity can, when dealing with one particular industry, place its great investments and those of its associate bankers, at the mercy of "Show-Offs."

With sincere criticism there is no fault to find. Harriett Underhill, Louella Parsons, George Gebhardt and others in New York; Rob Reel, Virginia Dale, and many others in Chicago, can state their views honestly and clearly and lose naught of self-respect nor of appreciation.

But will the Fates save us from the critic who reaches the state of mind that foolishly believes Mr. and Mrs. Public are more interested in HIM than they are in the picture?

THERE is a picture on Broadway at this moment that took some seven years in preparation, many hundreds of thousands in money, and REAL courage on the part of those responsible to bring it to the screen. And if business courage isn't as real as the physical sort then we miss our guess.

Aside from its spectacular features, the outstanding quality of the picture in question is a continuing, admirably handled vein of comedy. Nine out of ten reviewers commented on this phase.

But when one of our bright young men sits down to his typewriter he must have his "last line" in mind. "Send 'em away smiling" is the motto of his school, and the only means known is to jab somebody.

So we read: "A subtitle appears in which the reporter says, 'I have no opportunity to see big events or do big things.' This is the only laugh in the picture."

What's a man's labor, worry, and investment—compared to a "last line?"

Nothing at all.

Fortunately, and perhaps this is the measure of this type of criticism, the picture in question is selling "Standing Room Only." This of our own knowledge, and not from the lips of the press agent.

OH, well, perhaps we should turn to more pleasant subjects. It would have been easier, and perhaps more soothing to the feelings of all concerned, if we had filled this page with the customary dissertation on "the whichness of the why."

Here is a cheering thought to take you away from some critics, and some crickets.

The New York World is leading an admirable crusade to clean up the New York stage. It has been long overdue, and the only fear is that the crusade will pass, and the dirt remain.

But in all the columns of discussion, and the dozens of "Letters From Readers" we have failed to find a mention of motion pictures.

That's improvement. Had this crusade taken place a few years ago it might have started as a stage clean-up but it would have finished with two bricks aimed at us for one tossed in the direction of the "legit."

We are getting along. Nicely, thank you.

Speaking Freely

With all the editors in California it would seem that the one lone chap back in New York should have a lot of fun. Mebbe he is, if you call it fun to have oodles of inside information, and alleged inside information, whispered to you followed by the loudly spoken, "BUT DON'T PUBLISH IT YET!" Rumors? They're everywhere. Right on the heels of the fellow who slips you a morsel is the friend who says, "Tell me the latest." And you have just promised to remain mum. It's tough. Besides, what sort of publishing is it to tease your readers with a lot of talk like this and then tell 'em nothing? Rotten, we admit. But what's a feller gonna do?

Most important of the "inside stuff" concerns the resignation of the head of one of the leading distributors. To come off early in April. In fact, so it is said, the resignation is already in. But associates have prevailed upon the individual to wait.

If you must know, April 1st is the official date on the dotted line. But there is no connection between the date and the deed.

Another of the rumor clouds hovers about Vitagraph. A. E. Smith almost spilled it—but caught himself—when he told Kansas City papers, "Vitagraph will shortly announce a very important tie-up that, unfortunately, is not yet in shape for official announcement."

There are those who tie the rumor in with the haste shown by Sydney Cohen in applauding Vitagraph's withdrawal from the Hays organization. And that's that.

Some of the rumors blossom quickly and die as easily. Louella Parsons printed one Tuesday—with emphasis—about Harry Schwalbe joining Educational. To the best of our own knowledge, inside stuff and all, Louella spoke out of turn.

Something we all do at times.

Harry Schwalbe and Earl Hammons are very good friends, and Harry's friendly interest in Educational has been with it since the start. But they tell us that the Silent Mr. Schwalbe has real ideas in view over in Philadelphia. And is just as willing to forget New York for quite a spell.

Still, you never can tell.

Quite a few of the guesses hover about Cecil DeMille and the stars whom he will bring to the P. D. C. banner. Seems that a fair number of stellar contracts revert to the control of Cecil—and other individuals who would listen to his persuasive powers, and that of the plethoric bankroll back of the new association.

Looks like an exciting Fall—Yessir!

Harry Nolan, of Denver, reprints our recent editorial about the "I'll Have Mine" boys and sends it to his entire mailing list. We thank you, Harry. After which we come to the real point of this mention, the personal word that Harry wrote to exhibitors in connection with the reprint. In a few hundred words it sums up a creed. Worth reading. Here it is:

"Dear Friends: I have been selling pictures in Denver and Salt Lake since 1909. What material means and comforts I enjoy have come from exhibitors. One of the cardinal principles I have is that the exhibitor must show a profit, otherwise I can't go ahead. If you all go broke, so do I, and that would be bad, because the only way I know to make a living is selling pictures. I want to treat you the way I'd like to be treated if conditions were reversed. If we can work on that basis I think we can both be happy. If things seem to go wrong let me hear from you. I'll try and adjust it. Cordially, H. T. Nolan, First National Pictures, Inc."

That's saying a mouthful.

Harry also reprints Watt Rothacker's recent gift, "A little more kindness, a little less creed. . . . A little more flowers on the pathway of life, and fewer on graves at the end of the strife."

We have it on our own desk, Watt, and it's a good bit of inspiration. Except that it is rather tough on editors. One of the couplets reads, "A little more 'we'—a little less 'I.'"

Gosh, what chance has an editor got if you make him soft-pedal the mighty "I."

Here's something interesting. We have yet to hear a group discussing "The Lost World" and the big money it is certain to make without also hearing before long in the conversation, "Gee, I'm certainly glad to see Watt Rothacker get it." That's boosting. And friendship. And personality.

This industry has seen many examples of "coming through" despite storm and strife, but few to compare with the job that Benny Schulberg and Jack Bachmann have put over in the past year.

Starting from behind scratch, a year of worth-while product, re-established confidence on the part of territorial buyers, and an outlook for next year without a cloud. The new schedule just announced is something to be proud of.

Two more boys who have a host of rooters.

Quite a number of good financial jobs done in the past year. Vitagraph has burned the mortgage on the old homestead—and that's a story of courage and bull-dog persistence that belongs in industrial history. If American Magazine, Opportunity, or Success doesn't nail "A. E." for the inside story of the winning fight then they are missing something. And another one: Major Thompson's job up at F. B. O. Aided by a selling and advertising force that just never does take its foot off the gas. With the Major at the helm steering clear of the shoals and heading for clear water.

Got to tell you there is lots of interesting reading in this issue of The World. Take it home to read when you have plenty of time. You'll be glad you did.

Harry Warner's "Don't Tread on Me" statement f'rexample. Those Warner boys have a knack of saying what they mean in the most parliamentary language.

R. H. Cochrane on "Posters"—among other features. And Sydney Cohen's call to arms for the Milwaukee convention. The tocsin is sounding. Going to be lots of words flying in the few weeks, anyway, if nothing else. Mebbe something else. You never can tell.

Had a visitor to the office this week who measures up as a "reg'lar feller." Got to mention it to you exhibs because we know at conventions and the like one of the first questions is, "What sort of a chap is So-and-so? Is he regular?" Well, here's one who is. And you'll feel a little warmer towards him the next time he's on your screen. Rod La Rocque is the name. That's all.
—R. E. W.

Posters

By R. H. COCHRANE

Editor's Note—R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, is not the man to frequently "take his pen in hand." So when he does so to give an extensive discussion of that important subject—posters, we feel that it makes an article well worth presenting and reading. Of course, Mr. Cochrane talks from the angle he knows best—Universal's posters—but his general observations on the purpose of the motion picture poster and its creation have their value.

Dear Mr. Welsh:

You said some very fine things in your editorial on the poster situation. Good posters are by no means a matter of routine nowadays, though they are getting better.

There is only one way to solve the poster problem. We know that, because Universal tried it. There is no reason why the other companies should not follow. The only way to find out just what makes good posters is to find out from the exhibitors what posters are effective and what aren't, and give them posters that are.

That's the way Universal went after the poster situation. A canvass of several thousand exhibitors was made and the answers were full and direct.

It would have been easy, on the strength of over ninety per cent. of the remarks made about posters, to decide that Universal posters were great. But as long as they were only ninety per cent. satisfactory, that meant a ten per cent. improvement was possible. And that improvement was worth making.

The consensus of exhibitor opinion is that posters should be striking in coloring and lay-out, they should have action, and they should provide material for cut-out displays.

No poster that is merely a colored still will draw any business, unless it is the world's greatest still. It won't draw attention, either, no matter how well the artist has done his job. That the art work should be first class is essential, but that isn't everything. An advertisement should be written in correct English, but it has to be a lot more than correct to draw business.

The poster must illustrate, not merely a scene from the picture, for that is not likely to sell anything but the essential, fundamental dramatic appeal of the picture.

There is something different about every good picture which distinguishes it from all others. The poster department has to analyze the picture until they find out what that unique essential appeal is, and then draw a picture which will attract every one who sees it, and which will convey in a powerful flash the big appeal.

If the poster doesn't convey that big appeal immediately, strikingly and inevitably, all the art work won't help.

A few examples as illustrated here will explain the idea: Take the three-sheet on "Butterfly," for instance, which many exhibitors have said was the finest three-sheet they had ever seen. The man and woman are kissing in the midst of a symbolic candle, near the flame of which a girl, drawn as a butterfly, hovers. A single glance at this conveys immediately the nature of the story, its fundamental appeal, its general quality. For cut-out purposes this three-sheet is excellent. Many exhibitors who have used it for cut-outs put an electric light bulb behind the flame, which was covered with colored paper.

As a sample of the "dramatic" 24-sheet, look at "The Reckless Age" illustrated herewith. The letters of the title slope downward from left to right and are drawn with "speed lines" which give the effect of a tremendous dash on to destruction. On the letters are a man and a girl rushing down this symbolic slide at breathless speed. Here the title of the picture, instead of being stuck onto the poster when it is finished, is an integral part of the whole dramatic layout.

"The Tornado" 24-sheet is another example of where the dramatic effect is carried out in the lettering as well as in the illustration. The big feature of the picture is the tornado which sweeps away an entire town. One glance at the poster conveys that. In this a still is the basis, but it has been treated dramatically by drawing in a tremendous view of the tornado's destruction. The effect of the wind and storm is carried out in the style of lettering.

The three-sheet on "Wine," which has also been extensively used as a cut-out, shows that a poster based on a still can still have dramatic qualities. "The Mad Whirl" one-sheet conveys in an instant in a flashing, striking way the whole dramatic effect of the picture.

Another very important principle in the preparation of posters is that there are different kinds of theatres which require different kinds of posters, and Universal has in all the years of its existence been careful to prepare a variety of posters from which the exhibitor could select the kind he wanted.

One type of house, which caters to a refined and cultured clientele, wants posters of some dignity, while the other kind of house desires something more flashy. Consequently on Universal subjects there are several one-sheets, quite different in conception and treatment, to take care of both of these requirements. The posters on "Smouldering Fires" illustrate this point.

Good stills aren't enough. Good art work isn't enough. Good ideas aren't enough. All three are necessary, and they have to be worked into a dynamic, forceful, appealing

Distributing American Films in Italy

By CHARLES SIMONE

STRANGE as it may seem, Italians, though quite the easiest people to know, are generally misunderstood by their fellowmen of other nationalities. There is more truth than poetry in the saying: "When in Rome, do as the Romans do." Italians are justly proud of their traditions and their customs, and, quite naturally look askance at anyone who would ride roughshod over the things they love. As the average Italian readily and not unwillingly adapts himself to the ways of other people, he feels that foreigners doing business in Italy should Italianize themselves to a certain extent. The Italian character, once understood, is promptly appreciated.

For many years American film men have neglected the Italian market. Was it because they thought it poor and unsafe? Whatever interest they took in Italy consisted in making an occasional sale. The idea of distributing "our own" in Italy may have entered the mind of some American film executive prior to 1922 when far-sighted Carl Laemmle broke the proverbial ice and started the direct distribution of Universal films to the Italian exhibitors. It was a move in the right direction. And not far behind Mr. Laemmle soon came Hiram Abrams and William Fox. Others are sure to follow.

There is room in Italy for worth-while American pictures, worth-while distributors and worth-while policies. The popularity of American films in Italy is unquestioned. During the past year fully 70 per cent. of the pictures exhibited there were of American make. Remarkable indeed, especially when one considers that many of the prints were dupes and that in most cases both editing and titling were below par.

The great game of bluff that so tenaciously clings to the picture business cannot be played in Italy; they know the full meaning of the word "bluff" and they are quick to spot a bluff no matter how well disguised. The distributor unwise enough to believe in the power of bluff soon finds himself at the rear of the procession. Adertisements that tell untruths are abhorrent in the eyes of Italians, hence a mediocre production advertised as a masterpiece means a whole that can be taken in at a glance and that makes a positive appeal even to the passer-by.

Mr. Laemmle and I have always considered the poster department one of the most important departments in the whole Universal organization. Good posters can't be turned out haphazard. Each one requires thought and experimentation and improvement. Often twenty or thirty rough sketches are made at Universal before the right one is obtained. It is a lot of work, and it costs a lot of money, but in the long run it is the best investment that can be made for the exhibitor, because in most cases the exhibitor has to depend on posters for his clientele.

Sincerely,

R. H. COCHRANE.

The Public Is The Boss

By
Cecil B. De Mille

BECAUSE motion pictures will always be mass amusement; a form of entertainment reaching into all branches and gradations of society, there is but one standard by which to intelligently criticize and value a picture—they should be judged, not upon isolated personal likes and dislikes but on a basis of their percentage of appeal to the theatre-going public as a whole.

"None of us, therefore, have the right to say 'that is a poor picture' or that it is 'a good picture' if the yardstick is merely that of our own surroundings, education, background or prejudices. More of us, I feel, should view pictures on the broad basis of their general appeal. If we took this attitude our judgment would be correct more often than it is at present. For in the end the public at large makes its desires known in definite and firm form no matter what the initial and individual criticisms may have been.

"Time and time again pictures have met with scant favor at their start only to roll up amazing gross receipts. And of course that sister of the screen, the stage, has the most remarkable example of all in 'Abie's Irish Rose,' a play universally 'panned' on its debut but which is now playing in its third year to packed houses.

Criticism as an Aid to Production

"There is no doubt, successful production can be increased and speeded up if criticism could be universally geared as a guide rather than a goad. We don't all have the same tastes. There are, however, certain fundamental likes and dislikes which appeal to every one in greater or lesser degree. It is quite easy to imagine one person only mildly amused at a bit of comedy which would cause another to laugh uproariously. The question of the entertainment value of that offering should not be based on either extreme but an effort should be made to strike a mean average where the greatest number of people are entertained to the greatest extent.

"This is the viewpoint I think we should all hold when turning our attention to judgment of motion pictures. Personally I always try to crowd out any individual thoughts and to view the offering not as one but as one hundred people, all in different walks of life. Try this idea sometime. You will be surprised to find out how it will broaden your vision and alter your opinion as to the worth of a specific bit of entertainment.

"Most certainly we who make motion pictures have erred in our 'projection room' judgments. Time after time I have seen pictures which every one classed as 'failures' in a cold projection room, go out and make a marvelous success. One specific instance is a picture which appeared about five years over the protest of ninety per cent. of the officials of the company that released it. This picture has grossed to date over $1,500,000.

"There is only one real judge of pictures, the public. There is no one who can always guess accurately what that strange public is going to do, but we can get closer to their thought if we make our own judgment more general and less personally prejudicial.

"We hear of 'art' in motion pictures. What is art? Certainly it is an attainment of a destiny by some special force. And the destiny of motion pictures can never be an isolated or individual thing. The destiny of the motion picture is to provide cheap, easily understood entertainment not only to those who are able to be entertained by the more limited opportunities of the novel and stage, but to hundreds of thousands more who would be denied any realization of art were it not for the great invention of the cinema.

"The motion picture, therefore, provides mass entertainment and the artistic picture is, in my opinion, the picture which has the ability to please and entertain the greatest possible number of people.

"A good motion picture must, first of all, have a good, logical clean cut, human story. The recent contest I ran to secure a new idea which resulted in "The Ten Commandments," showed that the public are no longer content merely with a peppermint boy and butterscotch girl love story. They demand more substantial fare. The demand that photoplays delve deeper than the surface; must get down into the souls and lives of real people.

"Good motion pictures have been made with only one outstanding part. Such stories, however, are rare. Normally the good story is a mosaic of several fine parts which can reach the height of their excellence only when skilfully dovetailed one into the other.

"A good motion picture must give the illusion of reality. Subterfuges in settings and costumes which are permissible on the stage can make the best of screen stories look tawdry if used without discretion. Settings and costumes, incorrectly and inharmoniously done, can do much to throw 'off key' the most delightful of stories.

Proper Lighting a Big Factor

"A good motion picture must be deftly lighted. It is marvelous how the quality of a photoplay can be enhanced by proper lighting, how the nuances, the hidden meanings, the lights and shades of a role, can be brought out by thoughtful use of an illuminating medium. An excellent example of this is seen in that sequence of 'The Ten Commandments' where Moses comes to Pharaoh in his castle after the son of Pharaoh has been killed by the Plague of the Death of the first born. The sombreness of the lighting, the menace of the shadow, all of these drew the beholder immediately into the spirit of that portion of the story.

"Those of us who make pictures consider all these things. We have a definite objective in the creation of each picture. We are constantly endeavoring to produce pictures that will appeal not to the few but to the greatest number of people and our success is measured by the public at large when it reaches the screen and the verdict comes from the box office."

How One Small Towner Does It

By L. O. Davis
(Virginia Amusement Company)

IN a recent issue of Moving Picture World, Mr. E. N. Prescott, a brother exhibitor contributing reports to Straight From the Shoulder, asked, in that department, for help from other exhibitors in the matter of deciding how best to capitalize or take advantage of the word-of-mouth advertising that many good pictures get in small towns. Since many exhibitors run these pictures only one day, the free advertising that the public gives them subsequent to the performance, is lost, argued Mr. Prescott—how could it be turned to advantage?

After reading Mr. Prescott's letter I agree with him on one point and that is: This type of advertising for the small town is good providing the picture is a strong one, but if the picture does not please then the mouth to mouth advertising will do as much harm in a two or three-day run as it would do good on a pleasing production.

The following is a plan that I have established here in my biggest house and I find it to be very successful, giving me a chance at the mouth-to-mouth advertising once each week.

On Sunday (I run only matinee) I use an ordinary program picture saying but little about it and using one set of photos and a couple of one sheets to advertise.

On Monday and Tuesday I use the biggest picture of the week and give it a two-day run. This picture I put over in a big way by spending as much on it as I do all the balance of the week, for I have found that you can not put over more than one big picture a week. It will take this long to drive home the fact that you have a big picture.

By giving your special a two-day run you benefit by the word of mouth advertising; but you must have a special or it is doomed the second day for your second day's run is depending on the quality of the production. I have educated my people to the fact that I will run a big picture on Monday and Tuesday and they usually know they will see a good picture on these days and I get an extra admission price for the days regardless of what I run.

But I want to impress on you that I am very jealous of those two days and I make it a point to get nothing but the best. It is those days which determine the prestige of my house.

The public will not be disappointed by dropping in and seeing a rotten picture, when they have merely dropped in or just come to the picture show, regardless of what is on, but you go out and tell the world a few times that you have a big picture and give them a program picture and see how long it will be before you have opposition!

Tell them about the good ones and use but one super-picture a week so they will know when you have a big one.

There are very few pictures that will do more business the second day than the first in small towns, for your patrons are too limited, but there are many that will do a satisfactory business the second day's run and by splitting the cost of putting a picture over into two days it gives you a better chance to make money on it.

Wednesday, Thursday and Friday I run program pictures, using very little advertising on them. Saturday I run the biggest action picture I can get—the type of Mix, Carey, Gibson, etc., as I find that Saturday patronage is the type that wants action pictures and I believe this is true of Saturday patronage the world over. I advertise Saturday more than the other program days, but not like my special, for I only go after one a week and let the rest take care of themselves by giving the people good, consistent programs.

I never go outside my lobby to advertise except Monday and Tuesday and Saturday. When you start using about the same amount of paper on every picture, you only confuse them all in the minds of your patrons and consequently you don't do business on any of them. Drive one home. Get them all in to see it and the rest will take care of themselves. People only remember a very few pictures and if you can get them to remember one a week you are doing good.

These outstanding pictures will make you the friends. It is for this reason that I suggested the change in the report blanks for Straight From the Shoulder some time ago, to insert in the blank whether or not the picture was worthy of one of these fifty-two play dates every exhibitor has each year. I use the same discretion in placing in these specials as Rothafel would in the Capitol.

I can put "The Covered Wagon" on Monday, "Four Horsemen" on Tuesday, "Over The Hill" Wednesday, "Way Down East" Thursday, "The Sea Hawk" Friday, and "The Iron Horse" Saturday, and use the same—usual—amount of paper on each of them and I would not do as much business on the lot of these fine productions as I would if I featured the "Wagon" big on Monday and Tuesday and ran very ordinary pictures the rest of the week using but a small amount of paper on the latter.

Also, when you run a picture longer than one day it lends dignity to the showing and by running it the extra day your patrons will realize that it is a bigger picture than the average one or you would not use it two days.

Specialize your days, using certain types on the single days, appealing to certain elements on each day and you will find that you are able to please a greater percentage of people than by using indiscriminately any type picture.

WEEK BY WEEK, MOUTH-TO-MOUTH HELPS

Every small town exhibitor has heard praise all over town—the day after he runs a picture.

He has thought what fine pulling this would do—if he had the picture for that second day.

Maybe he has tried a two-day run—and flopped onto the red-ink page—because the town didn't talk.

L. O. Davis has been running three theatres in the vicinity of Hazard, Kentucky—and in that town—for some years; he has just added a fourth to his string.

He capitalizes the word-of-mouth advertising, and knows how to dodge the red-ink come-back pretty well, too.

He gives you the inside track on his scheme.

There's common sense in it.

There's exhibitor money in it!

Coming and Going

Harry Cohn is back in the New York office of C. B. C. after having been absent for over a year, the company announces.

Harry M. Berman, general sales manager for F. B. O., has returned to his desk in Manhattan after a visit of several weeks in Los Angeles.

Felix Orman is expected to sail late this week for Europe to resume in London and Paris his production and scenario work.

Gloria Swanson had to postpone her sailing from France due to an operation.

J. D. Williams returned to New York from the Coast this week.

Maurice Barber, general manager of the Cinema Finance Company, and his wife, Dorothy Farnum, booked passage this week on the Mauretania for Europe.

Francis X. Bushman has just returned from Rome.

James P. Chalmers, Sr., vice-president, and Miss Eliza J. Chalmers, secretary and treasurer of the Chalmers Publishing Company, are absent from New York on a transcontinental tour. They left on February 14 and will return to Manhattan in the latter part of March via the Panama Canal.

Cecil B. DeMille left for the Coast this week. It is expected that Jeanie MacPherson will join the western aggregation shortly.

Rowland V. Lee, Fox director, has left for the Coast.

Robert Lieber, president of First National, and his family sailed this week for a vacation abroad.

Arthur S. Kane is in New York from the West.

According to reports, Arthur Kelly, personal representative for Charlie Chaplin, will leave shortly for the Coast.

Herbert Brenon has left for Bermuda.

"BLUES" RAGING IN DAYTON

The Sunday closing agitation, which burst forth vigorously at Dayton, Ohio a few months ago, and then subsided, has again come to the fore, and according to present surface indications, it now looks like a fight to the finish. Although theatres, drug stores, cigar stores, and other places of business have been operating on Sunday, police recently arrested a clothing store proprietor for having made a single sale on the Sabbath day. In retaliation, said clothier has caused the arrest of the proprietor of a chain of drug stores, and promises to cause the arrest of movie managers and others who persist in keeping their places of business open on Sunday. The clothier contends that he has been discriminated against, and his attorney says the issue will now be brought to a climax.

Walker Is Neutral

Senator James J. Walker would neither affirm nor deny the report to the effect that he may enter the producing end of the motion picture business. The question was put to Senator Walker at Albany February 16. To this Mr. Walker replied:

"I may enter the business at that. But just now I am neither saying that I will nor that I won't."

New England Theatre Owners Form Unit of Commerce

On Tuesday, February 3, the New England Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce was organized and the following officers elected:

President, M. A. O'Leary, Inman Square Theatre, Cambridge, Mass.; and five vice-presidents: Walter Hartford, Imperial Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I.; Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, N. H.; Abe Goodside, Strand Theatre, Portland, Maine; Henry Levenson, Elm Amusement Co., Boston, Mass.; Homer Graves, Globe Theatre, St. Johnsbury, Vt.; Secretary, E. J. Farrell, Boston, Mass.; Assistant Secretary, H. R. Williams, Supreme Theatre, Jamaica Plain, Mass.; Treasurer, C. H. Williams, Franklin Park Theatre, Dorchester, Mass.

The Executive Committee includes: James Doyle, Broadway Theatre, South Boston, Mass.; Edward Fay, Fay's Theatre, Providence, R. I.; M. White, Orpheum Theatre, Dover, N. H.; J. Emery, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine; George Allen, Jr., Capitol Theatre, New Bedford, Mass.; John Dineen, Modern Theatre, Lawrence, Mass.; Vianni, Teele Square Theatre, Somerville, Mass.; J. Donahue, Park Theatre, Woonsocket, R. I.; Charles Bean, Jr., Pastime Theatre, Franklin, N. H.; L. M. Boas, Newburyport Amusement Co., Boston, Mass.; E. M. Loew, Loews Amusement Co., Boston, Mass.

Permanent quarters were opened at 40 Melrose Street, Boston. E. J. Farrell, Secretary, in charge of office.

Foreign Exhibitors to Swell Attendance at Convention

An attendance of 1500—a record for a national convention—is the hope of Wisconsin exhibitors who on May 11, 12 and 13 will be hosts in Milwaukee to the annual gathering of the M. P. T. O. of America. Possibilities for such a high attendance mark have been increased with the announcement that special reduced railroad fares will prevail from all points for return trip tickets.

A letter received from General Secretary W. Gavazzi King of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association of Great Britain and Ireland by the M. P. T. O. A. is to the effect that a definite delegation of six exhibitors has been selected to attend. Secretary King states that this may be augmented to probably twice that number, as leading officials of the exhibitor organization will be added to the delegation. This delegation will join with the representatives of exhibitors in France, Belgium, Italy and other sections of Europe and will probably leave for the United States on May 1.

They will be fraternal delegates, will have places on the programs and with committees and have every courtesy extended to them so as to make their attendance of as much value as possible to the European theatre owners. They will also add their experience to that of the American theatre owners and help in working out such problems as may be presented.

Fred Quimby is the latest acquisition to the sales staff of the Fox Film Corporation. He will be in charge of the distribution of Fox News and Fox Varieties

Consolidated Sends San

The Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., announce that Louis James San has left for Los Angeles, where he will take charge of the company's business on the West Coast.

TO "APPROVE" FILMS

Every federated club in the Southern California district has been asked to have a motion picture chairman present at the conference of the district department to be held soon. Mrs. Grace Frye, district chairman, will outline further plans for club attendance at approved pictures, and clubs that have already voiced their approval at the box offices of approved pictures will be asked to make reports.

This movement is gaining such an impetus that producers and exhibitors are now soliciting the co-operation of the district department to help in "putting over" pictures.

Texan Bill for Occupation Tax

An occupation Tax on motion pictures, musical comedies and practically every other form of amusement, to be graduated according to the size of the city of town where the shows are given was introduced in the Texas legislature February 13 by Representative E. L. Covey of Goree. The tax is applied to theatrical, dramatic and musical comedy shows, moving picture shows, opera houses, theatre, tents and airdomes. The annual occupation tax is graduated as follows:

Towns under 1,000, $5; 1,000 to 2,500, $15; 2,500 to 5,000, $20; 5,000 to 10,000, $25; 10,000 to 15,000, $30; 15,000 to 20,000, $40; 20,000 to 30,000, $50; 30,000 to 40,000, $60; 40,000 and over $75.

Counties, cities, towns and villages are authorized to impose a tax of one-half the amount of the state tax. When a show moves from one town to another the occupation tax is to be collected for each move.

Independents Must Stick Together, Says Sydney S. Cohen in Statement

Warns Against Panicky Booking, Attributing It to False Reports; Sees Bright Horizon —Joe Brandt's Review of Situation

KANSAS CITY MAN DIES SUDDENLY

Jacob J. Liberman, manager of the Empress Theatre, Kansas City, was found dead in his bed February 12. He had complained the night before of indigestion, but was not considered ill. Mr. Liberman, who was a veteran in theatrical circles, lived at the Hotel Baltimore. Theatre men of Kansas City arranged for funeral services in Kansas City, as well as in New York, where the body was sent.

$100,000 EVAN'S FIRE LOSS

Mark M. Dintenfuss, vice-president and treasurer of the National-Evans Film Laboratories at Fort Lee, N. J. issues a statement this week in which he expresses his doubt as to whether the recent fire damage to his plant will even reach $100,000. He makes this report, he announces, because of published reports crediting the plant with having been a complete loss.

JOE BRANDT

EIGHTY per cent of the film industry is comprised of independents, and the season 1925-26 should witness for them by their inter-cooperation one of real optimism and accomplishment. This, and what the independents should welcome and ward off, is the essence of a statement issued this week by Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the administrative committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which is as follows:

"A most cheerful and optimistic note is struck in the coming season of 1925-26 that augurs well for the advancement of all independent forces in the motion picture industry. This is due primarily to the fact that so many quality pictures of real entertainment value and merit are being made and will be made for theatre owners and the public by producing and distributing concerns who are satisfied with making their legitimate profit in the production and distribution of these motion pictures.

"The two major producing-distributing-exhibiting companies, who formerly had very little competition in the field of quality pictures, will find themselves for the first time faced with real intensive competition in the form of worthwhile quality pictures that are now in the making and that are promised for next season from Universal, Vitagraph, Warners, Pathe, as well as a large number of other units of independent producers, state rights or otherwise, all of whom are not interested in using the moneys obtained from theatre owners for the purpose of buying or building theatres in competition with their customers.

"The decided increase in successful independent productions cannot be explained without allowing a good deal for the co-operation of independent theatre owners. Very much may be hoped for from the further growth of this mutual co-operation between these two independent elements, who really comprise almost eighty per cent. of this industry.

"The time is rapidly approaching when a strong line of demarcation will be made between the producer-distributor-exhibitor forces, and all other exhibitors throughout the world who will be combined with producers and distributors who are not using the film-rentals obtained from these theatre owners for the purpose of building or acquiring theatres in unfair competition with them.

"Theatre owners will have cause for rejoicing, and it behooves them to consider carefully what they have to sell—their play-dates. Don't sign them away until you have carefully looked over the entire market, otherwise many of the most worthwhile productions of the season will be withheld from your theatres by reason of this tying up of available play-dates.

"Play-dates are the vital fluid of the industry, and the time has come to mobilize all the play-dates of the independent theatre owners everywhere. These play-dates should be allocated and used to build up and support producers and distributors who are confining their resources and ability to making quality pictures and the proper merchandising of them.

"Holding the advantage he does, how can any thinking theatre owner permit himself to be stampeded each buying season, as so many of them permit themselves to be? It is regrettable that theatre owners often allow their better sense to desert them, even in some cases to the extent of giving away half of their theatres and the operation of them to one of the producing-distributing-exhibiting concerns for nothing, because they have become panicky through the threat of these people building in opposition to them or through false reports of a scarcity of quality films that would make it difficult to operate their theatres.

"Theatre owners must cease being stampeded by the subtle propaganda emanating from such sources, directly or indirectly. It is all done for one purpose—the weakening of independent theatre owners, the discouraging of the independent producers and distributors with the ultimate purpose of monopolizing the industry.

"The time for resoluting and talking is over with. We must act. This is a practical business problem. Let us apply the same sound judgment to this grave menace that we have used in building up our theatres and this industry, The power that is latent in theatre owners by virtue of their commanding position in the industry must be assembled and combined with the power of all other independent forces—production, distribution and exhibition, not alone in this country but throughout the world, to throw off the shackles and handcuffs that are being thrust upon us by a few interests who are attempting to control the destinies of the motion picture public of all lands and this industry. We have the force, but it must be co-ordinated and united. What is required is the establishment of a definite entity to mobilize and intelligently direct this force for the preservation of all independents. It must be done soon.

"However, there must be mutual co-operation between all 'independents.' Let the independent theatre owner remember that every play date given to a producer-distributor-exhibitor film company adds a brick to some theatre that will be built or acquired in competition to him or some other independent theatre owner. Let him instead mobilize and conserve his play dates for the meritorious product of the independent producer and let the independent producer and distributor do all he can to aid the independent exhibitor, so that the results for the theatre owner will warrant a continuation of such support. Just supplying the picture is not enough. The rental must be one that a theatre owner can reasonably afford to pay. The product must be intensively and agressively exploited and merchandised, and a demand created with the public, upon whose appreciation all values in the industry are predicated.

"Our public is entitled to the best in entertainment and we must keep our screens free and open, lest the factory and machine-made product that will be their portion if 'monopoly' rules, bring with it the very destruction of our industry.

"All must work hand in glove with each other, so that through our united, intelligent effort 'independents' will bring about their own salvation."

JOE BRANDT'S REVIEW

Joe Brandt of Columbia Pictures Corporation this week also issued a review of the independent situation. The statement in part reads:

"In order to give my viewpoint of the outlook of the industry, it is necessary for me to go back to the days when I was New York manager of the Billboard and in charge of the Motion Picture Department and associated with Lyman Fisk on the Dramatic Mirror, and immediately prior to my becoming associated with Carl Laemmle.

"In those days we had instead of Paramount, First National, Metro-Goldwyn, United Artists, a group just as powerful in the producing field namely, Biograph, Vitagraph, Kalem, Lubin, Selig, Essanay, and whereas, today we have C. B. C.—Columbia Pictures Corporation, Charles Burr, Chadwick Pictures, Arrow Films, in those days we had Carl Laemmle's Imp, Tannhauser, Edward Porter's Rex, Herbert Miles, Mark Dintenfass, Charles Baumann and Adam Kessell.

"When the big factors in those days saw that the independents were keeping the open door policy alive, they, too, took steps to consolidate their interests and formed the Patents Company.

"Instead of issuing licenses to theatres as the Patents Company did in those days, the big interests today are acquiring theatres and building big circuits in order to consolidate their interests.

"When the Patents Company became strong enough they, too, adopted methods to control the industry and the exhibitor was forced into the position where, in order to keep his theatre open, he had to follow the rules and regulations that were set down, or go out of business.

"When the exhibitors began to feel the pressure that was forced upon them, they welcomed the entrance into the field of the consolidated efforts of the Film Sales Corporation, which was the amalgamation of all of the independent interests of that date. Lawsuits and legal battles involving fortunes were conducted by the independents to preserve for the industry the right of the exhibitor to book his pictures in the open market and to conduct his business as he saw fit in order to enable him to own his own theatre and to follow the dictates of good business judgment in booking only such pictures as would make money for him.

"The independents today are consolidated under the banner of the Independent Motion Picture Producers & Distributors Associatio and they, too, are getting ready to wage warfare, if necessary, to keep an 'open door' policy and to enable the exhibitors to continue to believe that he is the real owner of his theatre and that the money that he has put into brick and mortar, which, in many cases, represent all the investment he has in the world, will be conserved for himself and his posterity.

"The recent announcement of two of the big interests that they were going to build more theatres this year and the continuation of the policy of building up big circuits around some of the first run theatres in the key cities, proves conclusively that the big producer-distributor theatre-owned interests are forging the chain which will gradually be drawn around the independent exhibitor so that he will no longer be free to carry on his business as he sees fit but will have to dance to the music that is played for him.

"There is only one solution to the problem to the exhibitor who wants to remain independent, and that is, to open up his booking dates to independent product and keep the field open for real competition. I am sorry I am not at liberty to mention the name of one of the biggest owners of a circuit of theatres who stated to me that in his opinion the tactics used by most exhibitors in excluding independent product would eventually bring about condition where the industry would be under the control of a few producers. He is fair-minded enough to keep 40 per cent. of his time open for independent pictures and he has given encouragement to independent producers to make the best that the market demands in order that he may feel safe in continuing to conduct his business as he believes is profitable and fair to all producers.

"The Independents have established themselves on a firm financial basis—they are producing pictures today that have made money at the box office but they cannot continue to do this unless the exhibitors give them the financial support that they need in order to continue to head off the danger that is facing the entire industry.

"The cases are numerous enough to prove the folly of an exhibitor building up a trademark instead of a theatre. During the past two years a great number of exhibitors who blazoned forth on their marquise the name of one of a few prominent producers found that they had placed themselves in a precarious position—that if they refused to continue the service at the price that was asked it would mean that all of the work in advertising and exploiting the trademark would be wasted and their competition would take over the service and it would necessitate building up a new clientele for their theatres.

"The time has arrived when the theatre owner, who is a real theatre owner, and is not controlled by the producers, and who has his money invested in his theatre, to look the facts squarely in the face and ask himself how long will he be able to continue in business if he persists in the method of playing wholly and solely the pictures made by the producers who own and control circuits of theatres nationally. How often has it been said that some ambitious film salesman, has held out the apparent threat that if the exhibitor did not buy the product of the producer who is also a National theatre owner, that this national theatre owner would come to his town and build theatres.

"These big interests know that they cannot continue in business if they depend solely upon the revenue they receive from their own theatres and if it were not for the money that they receive from the thousands of exhibitors throughout the country, who own their own theatres, or think they do, these producers could not continue to swing the big stick and force down the throats of the exhibitors what they think is the right price for service or the right kind of pictures for the exhibitors to use."

Florida Experiencing Theatre Building Boom of Magnitude

WITH the huge influx of tourists from the northern states, the business of the moving picture houses along the east coast of Florida has been on the increase. There are many projects for new houses in process of consummation this year, and among the new theatres announced during the past month is a new house at Lakeland, Florida, and the opening of the new Palace Theatre in that city under the management of T. B. Garner. At Lake Worth, the Oakley Brothers will open a new theatre soon, and H. J. Denton, formerly of the Sunset Theatre at Fort Lauderdale, will be the resident manager.

A new million-dollar house is projected for Miami by the Paramount Enterprises, Inc., and according to the plans the structure will be ten stories in height. At Melvin, Florida, the new Van Croix Theatre of one thousand seats has been opened, and the Kettler Theatre at West Palm Beach has been doing a capacity business since its opening last fall.

Fred Bryan reports record business at his new Aladdin Theatre at Cocoa, Florida, where he has a house seating one thousand and showing both pictures and legitimate attractions. Mr. Bryan intends to build a 300-seat house for the colored folks in the near future in Cocoa which will give them the only first-class house for their own use in that part of the country.

A new movie house will be opened at Hollywood, Florida, next month, under the management of A. R. Enos. At Tampa, on the west coast, the Strand Amusement Company has approved the plans for a new theatre in that city that will front on Franklin Street, and included is a fifteen-story office building with the theatre on the ground floor. The house will seat fifteen hundred and show both legitimate attractions and moving pictures. W. B. Gray is president of the company and H. S. Hampton secretary.

Other west coast theatre projects are in the making and will be announced at an early date.

Prominent Speakers for Woodhull Dinner

William H. Hoskin, mayor of Dover, N. J., has accepted the invitation extended to him by the committee in charge of the testimonial dinner to R. F. Woodhull, taking place at the Robert Treat Hotel, March 4, and will serve as toastmaster. The speakers will include Mayor Breidenbach, of Newark; Judge David, Michael J. O'Toole, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Sydney S. Cohen, former president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Joseph M. Seider, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, and Mr. Woodhull.

Through a special arrangement with R. Bamberger and Co., of Newark, the events of the evening will be broadcast through station WOR.

Sydney S. Cohen, of the M. P. T. O. A., issued this week a statement in which he reviewed Woodhull's career in the motion picture industry.

UNITED ARTISTS' EXECUTIVES RETURN

Joseph M. Schenck, recently elected chairman of the board of directors of United Artists Corporation, and Arthur W. Kelly, second vice-president of United Artists, returned to the States on the Mauretania on Friday, February 13, from Europe.

Mr. Schenck and Mr. Kelly have been in Europe for more than two months and have made a complete tour of Great Britain and Continental Europe, visiting all of the branch offices controlled by United Artists Corporation.

Exhibitor Cleared of Shooting Man

Steve Chulick, proprietor of the Lowell Theatre, Broadway and De Soto Streets, St. Louis, Mo., has been completely exonerated for fatally wounding Elroy Finke, 21 years old, a patron of his theatre on the night of February 10. The grand jury found that Chulick had shot Finke in self-defense and voted a "no true bill" in the case. Chulick who had been held by a coroner's jury under $10,000 bond to await the action of the grand jury was released from the bond.

The grand jury acted on the same testimony presented at the coroner's inquest: that Ben Schwartz, former owner of the house, had barred Finke from the place except when accompanied by Mrs. Finke, and that on Thursday, February 5th, Chulick had to call the police when he created a disturbance.

IN order to set at rest all rumors circulating in regard to the possibility of Warner Bros. withdrawing from the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association of America, Harry M. Warner, president of the company, this week issued the following statement:

"A great many rumors have been floating around that we are going to withdraw from the Hays organization. There is no truth in this whatsoever. There are a number of things now functioning under the Hays organization that should be, and can be, remedied for the benefit of all parties concerned, and this week issued the following statement:

"This company, for one, does not intend to have any person or group of persons, tell it how it shall conduct its own personal business. However, Warner Bros. do not withdraw or quit. We try to build up; not tear down. We believe in construction rather than destruction. If we could make two dollars where we are now making one, and by making that extra dollar, interfere with the livelihood of some other person, we prefer to make one instead of two. In plain language we want everyone to make a living, and we insist on being left alone to make a living for ourselves without anyone telling us what to do or how to do it. That is the policy to which we are dedicated and that is the policy we shall carry out.

"I am leaving for the coast where I shall take up with Mr. Hays several matters that we think should be remedied by him personally. These are matters too numerous to mention that not only affect us, but everyone in the industry. From what I know of Mr. Hays, I do not think there will be any trouble in remedying them. I have always found him most fair, open to suggestion and working hard for the good of the industry. He has a tremendous problem, and we shall work with him to the end that everyone connected with motion pictures will be ultimately benefited.

"We believe that when men in one line of industry can sit around a table and each discuss their needs as a whole, there is no reason why all parties concerned should not be able to work out existing problems, if those sitting around the table have really the welfare of the industry in its entirety at heart.

"Of course, in this industry, as in any other line of endeavor, there is always the human equasion; always men with selfish motives, and things that benefit the industry as a whole may often be injurious to them as individuals. This problem is a hard one to solve. It is very difficult to take a number of persons operating in one line of business, each working under different policy, each with his own more or less ambitious plans, and try to please them all. That is understood by us and should be understood by anyone in the business world.

"In this connection, everyone attached to the Hays organization should realize that there are different classes of pictures produced, different methods of doing business and different aims in view. Where one man is satisfied to make two pictures a year and earn his livelihood therefrom, others want to make six or a dozen or twenty—and some want to make them all.

"The same thing applies to theatres. There are men who are very happy in operating one theatre in their respective town or locality. Others want ten or twenty, and others want to control every theatre built. Somewhere along the line the idea of live and let live seems to have been lost in the shuffle.

"Right here I want to say something about the Warner Bros. building their own theatres about which there has been considerable talk and comment. Let us make it plain that Warner Bros. do not intend to have anything to do with any theatre building plan that will interfere in the slightest with any exhibitor making a living. Whatever plans we have in mind are consistent with the views I have expressed at the beginning of this statement.

"The writer knows a man high in the motion picture field who two years ago said to the four Warner brothers that the production of motion pictures, and the operating of theatres were no longer a secret and that nowadays no man in the industry was worth more than $50 a week. That statement of course, is an exaggeration and would mean destruction if it were true. But Warner Bros. having no desire to work for $50 a week, are determined to pursue their own plans in their own way and in such a manner that no one will be injured.

"To return to the main problem of the Hays office—how to satisfy all the individuals in the association? I want to say that Mr. Hays, in this one particular alone, has a mammoth job on his hands. Not because any of them are particularly wrong as they see it—but because of their own ambitions and personal desires. This desire has been in existence since the world began. There are men who want to rule, to be overlords of their particular field. There are men who want to work for others, and there are also men who want to be charitable and, in the spirit of fair play, give everybody a chance.

Kansas Legislature Okays Censor Unit

Both Kansas exhibitors and blue advocates received a jolt in the Kansas Legislature this week. The bill to abolish the Kansas state censor board was killed in the House by the committee on public welfare. Also, the Endres bill, which would provide for the prohibition of any distasteful pictures, and was introduced by blue law advocates, was killed by the same committee. The vote of 6 to 4 on the latter followed a series of meetings, several of which were spirited.

It is believed that another bill to abolish the board may be introduced in the Senate. Should that occur it is believed that the bill would have more than an even chance of weathering the storm.

ONTARIO OFFICIALS FIND IT HARD TO COLLECT AMUSEMENT TAX

Steps taken by the Amusement Tax Branch of the Ontario Provincial Government have resulted in the collecting of considerably more revenue from a number of Toronto moving picture theatres that had not charged sufficiently for the amusement tax, according to announcement by Hon. W. H. Price, provincial treasurer, who said that the Ontario act was quite hard to enforce. The Amusement Tax Branch had checked up on those who had been short in their payments.

There were no attempts to beat the tax on the part of the exhibitors, it was announced, and no prosecutions were made, but in some instances the tax had not been up to the amount required by the law.

FOUR NEW THEATRES FOR N. Y. C.

Announcement of plans for the erection of four theatres at an approximate total cost of $1,750,000 was made this week by Bing & Bing, Inc., a Manhattan real estate firm. It is said that the four will be built in one square block in 50th and 51st streets, east of Seventh avenue, New York City. The statement reveals that the houses, two of which will be for motion pictures, are being contemplated as an investment and are not being engineered by any theatrical or motion picture company.

DENIG ADDRESSES COLLEGIANS

Lynde Denig, manager of the publicity division of First National Pictures, Inc., talked before the College Women's Club of Syracuse, in Hanna Hall on the Union College campus, on February 18, on "The Little Theatre Movement in Motion Pictures."

"We believe that time will right all the existing conditions that are now problems, but I, for one, contend that only by the principals connected with each company sitting around one table in open discussion, and being fair and equitable with the other fellow as well as with himself, can the conditions now existing be rightened.

"There is no question but that the Hays organization has done a great deal for the welfare of the industry, but, of course, when it comes to running a man's business—that's another story. Or when it comes to affecting a man's livelihood—that is also another story.

"We will remain in the Hays organization, but that does not preclude us from the privilege of thinking for ourselves."

Indiana Sunday Blue Bill Is Amended to Increase Penalty

WITH an amendment submitted by its author, the Leonard "blue Sunday" bill, designed to increase the penalties of the existing Sunday observance law, which is pending in the Indiana general assembly, has been advanced to second reading in the senate and is expected to come up for final passage some time during the week. As amended, the measure would place Sunday regulation of moving picture shows, theatrical productions and the manufacture of necessary commodities on a local option basis.

The bill itself, which was introduced by Senator C. Leroy Leonard, of Warsaw, is regarded as a compromise measure to satisfy the proponents and opponents of more stricter Sunday regulation. It is in the nature of an amendment to the present Sunday observance law.

"This is strictly a moral bill and not a religious measure," said Senator Leonard, "and should meet with the approval of all concerned."

The amendment, as offered by the author and adopted by the senate, would exempt moving picture shows, theatrical productions and manufacturers of necessary commodities from the provisions of the existing law and also would provide that such may be regulated by ordinance by cities and towns in accordance with the general sentiment of the respective communities.

The amendment also provides that in cases where prosecuting attorneys fail to act in enforcing the law, the attorney-general may prosecute. As originally drafted the bill stipulated that the attorney-general "shall" act. The Kissinger "blue Sunday" bill, which was introduced in the house, is ready to be handed down for second reading but it is understood action on it will be withheld pending the outcome of the Leonard bill. It is far more drastic than the senate measure.

Werner Builds Biggest Suburban House in Kansas City

Construction of Kansas City's largest suburban theatre, a 2,500-seat theatre and office building combined, to cost $2,500,000, will begin in a few weeks. E. W. Werner, who now operates the Warwick Theatre, large suburban house, has obtained a 25-year lease on the new theatre, which will be located at Broadway and Valentine road and which will be named after Mr. Werner. The building will be twelve stories in height.

"I intend to make the new Werner Theatre the most elaborately equipped theatre in Kansas City," Mr. Werner said. "Of course I will continue to operate the Warwick. We will have a stage nearly forty feet square, enabling us to stage prologues and novelty numbers. Our policy will be first run and first suburban run pictures. The theatre will contain a balcony with boxes above the main floor level and below the balcony. Promenades will be on both the balcony and main floor levels, as well as lounging rooms. A pipe organ, the type of which I will select later, costing $75,000, will be installed. A large canopy at the theatre entrance, as well as elaborate bronze grill work above the entrance, will be among the features."

HAMMONS DENIES REPORT

A report current on February 18 that Harry Schwalbe, recently resigned from First National, had become associated with Educational was described by E. W. Hammons to Moving Picture World as erroneous.

"I don't know anything more about it than you do," he informed his interrogator.

Syracuse Exhibitors Fight Attempt to Jack License Fee

The hearing before the Syracuse Common Council on the proposed boost in license fees has been postponed a week. In the meantime exhibitors will collect data to show that Syracuse is now paying a higher license fee than any other city in the state outside New York. It is proposed to increase the fee of houses with a seating capacity of over 1000 from $300 to $500. The maximum in Buffalo is $100, while other cities in the state have a fee ranging from $25 to $50.

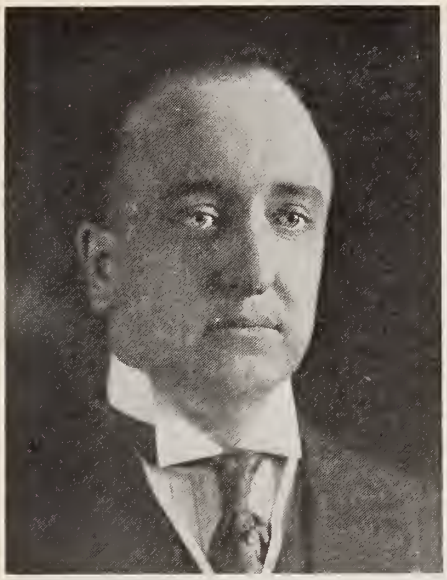
Francis P. Martin, manager of the Robbins-Eckel theatre, declares there should be no license fee for motion picture houses any more than for other business enterprises. He insists the proposed increase is a "holdup" and an "outrage." "The time has come," he said, "for the theatre interests to force a showdown. Our sentiment will be expressed in a manner to provide food for thought for the aldermen."

At the recent meeting of the exhibitors in Syracuse affiliated with the state organization there was a 100 per cent. collection of dues for the year and a promise on the part of every exhibitor present to give his support to the body in its efforts to fight legislation harmful to the theatre interests of the state.

Three Lootings in St. Louis During Week

Three St. Louis theatres were victims of robbers during a single week. On February 9 Cullen Espy, manager of the West End Lyric Theatre, Delmar boulevard near Euclid avenue, was stuck up in the lobby of the theatre and robbed of $1,600, the receipts of Saturday and Sunday. Early on the same morning burglars broke into the office of the Red Wing Theatre, 4545 Virginia Avenue, and failing in their efforts to open the theatre safe, carried off the strong box. It contained only papers and office records.

Early on February 12 burglars broke into the New Delmar Theatre, 4938 Delmar Boulevard, and cracked the safe which contained about $1,000. The money represented the receipts of the Delmar, Congress, Criterion, Plaza and Yale theatres owned by the Super Theatres Corporation, headed by Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu.



WALTER W. IRWIN

Irwin Says Method of Shipments Up to Showmen

Exhibitors will be privileged to determine how prints should be shipped, the Railway Express Film Transport Company, Inc., makes known this week in response to numerous inquiries. No matter which transportation service the theatre owner selects he will be aided by the new company. The statement coming from Walter W. Irwin also reveals that "the greatest improvement will be brought about in connection with the American Railway Express Company service not now possible with the multiplicity of exchanges."

The statement goes on to say:

"Since the points raised appear to be restricted to the element of transportation cost, it is well to mention that in many cases the parcel post rates are higher than the express rates; so that the cost basis alone, for the selection of transportation service by the exhibitor, will work both ways, but this, as before remarked, lies wholly in the control of the exhibitors and not at all with the Railway Express Film Transport Company.

"There seems to be an impression and a consequent fear in the minds of some that the plan of this company constitutes, or is tantamount to, a consolidation of the industry or at least of those companies which contract with it. Again nothing could be further from the legal fact or from the intention. The company merely furnishes facilities and services for the physical and mechanical handling of products (thus doing away will illogical duplication) under a uniform contract common to all; and both by the charter of the company and the provisions of the uniform contract the company is precluded from having anything to do with selling or with production, either directly or indirectly."

EXHIBITOR KILLED BY TRAIN

J. S. Lewis, owner of a moving picture house at Gotherburg, Neb., was instantly killed when a westbound Union Pacific mail train struck his car here last week. His body was carried by the engine for a distance of 500 feet, and his car, which stalled on the crossing, was carried for nearly a mile. The train was said to have been traveling at the rate of 60 miles an hour.

Child Labor Law Angle Hits Several Detroit Exhibitors

W. D. SHAFER, manager of the Fox-Washington Theatre, together with the managers of three other neighborhood houses, have been brought into Recorder's Court during the past 10 days for alleged violation of the child labor law. All have been given the alternative of a fine of $100 or 30 days in jail. Out of a clear sky the movie houses in Detroit have been checked from booking acts in which juveniles take part, although this practice has been going on for years and years.

Juvenile acts have proved the most popular of all added attractions for most of the outskirt theatres and the present campaign, which was inspired by several welfare organizations, is likely to prove a financial blow.

Shafer was arrested, it is reported, during the engagement of "The Dancers" at his theatre. Through a booking agency he obtained an act suitable for a prologue and following the usual custom did not investigate the presence of one youthful dancer in the cast. To his surprise he was taken to court. This was the first arrest and others have followed. The latest to feel the effects was Emil Beck, manager of the Strand Theatre, one of the largest in the John H. Kunsky string of outskirt houses.

An investigation is being made of the charges by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, and it is likely that H. M. Richey, its manager, will attempt some sort of a solution by interviewing the organizations responsible for the campaign.

Montana Confronted Suddenly by Very Obnoxious Bill

In Montana a measure has been introduced before the present legislature providing for a state board of censorship for all motion pictures to be exhibited in Montana. The proposed law is signed by the Republican floor leader and four other members of the house.

The measure specifies that the board for the regulation of moving picture shows be composed of three members, their salaries to be paid by a special tax assessed against the films. One section of the bill is devoted to what are considered proper films for minors under 18 years of age.

Harry Meyer, president and secretary of the Montana Board of Trade, is in Helena to fight the bill. Other film men, representing the interests of the various exchanges here, as well as theatre men, are in Helena to lobby against the measure.

It is not so much the censorship, it is said, that is objectionable but the tax on the films and the clause relative to minors.

MANITOBA ASSOCIATION ELECTS

The Manitoba Motion Picture Exhibitors Association held its annual meeting at the Marlborough Hotel, Winnipeg, Manitoba, February 12. D. E. L. Fisher, manager of the Garrick Theatre, Winnipeg, was elected president, succeeding Helmer Jernberg, manager of the Province Theatre, Winnipeg. L. Straw, manager of the Starland Theatre, Winnipeg, was elected vice-president of the Provincial organization and Gordon Lindsay of Winnipeg was elected secretary-treasurer. Lindsay succeeds R. Kershaw, who had been an officer of the association for many years. As a result of these elections, the Manitoba exhibitors now have practically a new board of officers.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., FEES TROUBLE

Syracuse, N. Y., theatre managers are up in arms over the proposed increase in their license fees. Alderman Thomas Staunton has proposed that the rate for houses seating 1,000 or over be boosted from $300 to $500 annually. James Roe, president of the Syracuse Theatre Managers' Association, announces that every house in the city will unite in contesting the increase. Walter Hays, president of the state organization, who also is president of the Syracuse Strand Theatre Company, declares that the proposed increase is unreasonable and unfair, and that the proposed fee is many times more than a large city like Buffalo. The council will hold a hearing on the subject.

More Robberies Occur in Butte, Detroit and St. Louis

At 9:30 p. m. on January 29 two bandits robbed the Ansonia Theatre, Butte, Mont. While one man slugged the girl in the box office booth, the other bandit reached into the booth by jimmying the lock to the door entrance. The cashier, Miss Schasser, managed to save a second bag of money. Something under $100 was taken.

Another St. Louis theatre manager has been kidnapped by robbers and forced to return to his show house and turn over the contents of the safe to his captors. This time Ralph Walsh, manager of the Maffitt Theatre, was the victim. The robbers escaped with $700 in cash, the receipts of January 31 and February 1.

Peter Powell, assistant manager of the Ecorse Theatre, Detroit, was bound and gagged by masked robbers one night recently before leaving the theatre and lost about $200 in theatre funds and personal effects.

SEEK NEW WISCONSIN HEADQUARTERS

With the lease on the present quarters in the Toy building expiring in July, the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin has three down town, Milwaukee, sites under consideration, according to Henry Staab, executive secretary. One is the Carpenter building, Sixth street and Grand avenue, in which the Wisconsin Theatre is located; a second is the Plankinton arcade building, Second street and Grand avenue, and the third is the Branchman building, Fifth and Wells streets. All of the locations are in the vicinity of film row.

ALBERTA TAX DECREASES

The total revenue from the Amusement Tax in the Province of Alberta last year was $192,607, according to figures brought down in the Alberta Legislature at Edmonton, a few days ago. This is slightly less than the total for 1923, which was $203,892. In the report of the Provincial treasurer it was pointed out that there had been no circuses in Alberta during 1924 to swell the amount of amusement tax returns.

Further Proof

"The present activities of the District Attorney and the Association of Grand Jurors to relieve the stage in New York of objectionable plays proves the contention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners that no censorship law is necessary for the protection of the public in this relation, as these agencies are conducted in the regular and constitutional way," maintains M. J. O'Toole, head of the M. P. T. O. A.

"It is because we realize that these public agencies have adequate power to protect the people at all times and under all circumstances, that we are opposed to political censorship. It is destructive of artistic ideals, sets the judgment of a few party retainers over that of the public and by contravening the freedom of a great medium of expression—the screen—is dangerous to liberty."

Oklahoma Kills One Censorship Bill to Meet Second

A censorship bill introduced in the Oklahoma Senate a few days ago was defeated on February 12 only to be followed up with the introduction of another similar measure by Senator Johnson.

Announcement is made that this latest bill, like its predecessor, will be strongly opposed by Famous Players-Lasky, represented by George A. McDermit, district manager, and by Tom Boland, manager of the Empress Theatre and spokesman for the Oklahoma Theatre Owners and Managers Association.

This latest provision would make it unlawful "to exhibit a picture, film or play, depicting hi-jacking, bank robbing, or any obscene, indecent or immoral film, scene or act."

NEW YORK ASSEMBLYMAN DENIES ALBANY NEWS STORY

By some strange twist, Albany papers a few days ago carried a story to the effect that Assemblyman Irwin Steingut, of New York City, had introduced a bill which would legalize motion picture shows on Sunday throughout the state. Investigation showed that no such bill had been introduced, and upon being questioned, Mr. Steingut emphatically denied any intention of introducing such a bill and stated that he did not know how the story could have originated.

UNITED ARTISTS' NEW MANAGER

Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, announced this week the appointment of Mr. C. C. Wallace, as branch manager of the United Artists Chicago Exchange. Wallace is well known in the middle-west territory, having formerly been Chicago Manager for Paramount and recently District Manager in that territory for Famous Players Lasky Corporation.

LITIGATING "THE FOOL"

Suit for $1,000,000 against Channing Pollock and Arch and Edgar Selwyn was filed this week in the District Court, New York, by Abraham P. Waxman. The latter claims a prior right to "The Fool," written by Pollock and produced by the Selwyns.

Six Companies Are Incorporated in N. Y.

Companies incorporating and entering various branches of the motion picture industry in New York state during the past week, were characterized by comparatively small amounts of capitalization, the total for the six companies chartered by the secretary of state reaching but $180,000.

The largest companies formed were the Buckner Star Productions, capitalized at $100,000, and the Frank L. Teller Holding Corporation, $50,000, each having as its directors: L. Hess, M. Phillips, New York; M. Lubitz, Brooklyn. Other companies formed included the Lipsco Amusement Corporation, $15,000, A. A. Weiss, N. Weiss, M. Weiss, New York; Regbeth Amusement Co., Inc., $4,000, W. P. Adler, New York; J. Newman, A. Schwartz, Brooklyn; Jasmont Company, Inc., $10,000, J. H. Montgomery, H. C. O'Donnell, A. R. Walsh, New York; Leeleff, Inc., $1,000, L. Leslie, J. Kendler, New York, H. Goldberg, Brooklyn.

ANOTHER WOMAN SEEKS N. Y. FILM COMMISSION APPOINTMENT

Another woman entered the race for a place on the New York State Motion Picture Commission to succeed Mrs. Helen M. Hosmer, of Buffalo, the Republican member, whose term expired on December 31 last. The newcomer is Mrs. Elizabeth V. Colbert, register in the city of Albany, and one of the Democratic women leaders in that county. Governor Smith has given no indication as to when he intends to make the appointment.

WRAY WITH UNIVERSAL

John Griffith Wray, formerly associated with Thomas Ince, has been signed by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, to be production manager at Universal City. Concurrent with this announcement comes the information that Mrs. Winifred Reeve, eastern scenario editor, and Burl Armstrong, west coast editor, have recently bought a large group of novels, serial stories and plays. Wray succeeds Julius Bernheim, who resigned on account of ill health.

SCENE OF BOMBED KANSAS CITY THEATRE

Bomb Kansas City House; $5,100 Loss

The down-town corner of Eighth and Walnut streets, Kansas City, was rocked at 3:35 o'clock Saturday morning, February 14, when a dynamite bomb was exploded in front of the World-in-Motion Theatre, owned and operated by Earl H. Roraback. The explosion wrecked the front of the house, but did not damage the inside, resulting in $5,100 damage. The house had been picketed for several months by the operators' union.

About ten days ago the pickets were withdrawn. The withdrawal, according to M. Coffee, secretary of the Picture Machine Operators' Union, was because of finances only. Any labor trouble, he said, could not have been responsible for the explosion. Mr. Roraback has his own ideas on the outrage and an investigation is being made, which, it is expected, may result in arrests soon.

WARNERS WILL PADDLE OWN CANOE SAYS H. M. WARNER

"Please state emphatically for me that Warner Bros. have made no affiliations with any distributing company, nor are we considering making any connection with any other company," said H. W. Warner, president of Warner Bros. just before leaving for the coast. Then he added:

"Warner Bros. now and in the future, as in the past, will paddle their own canoe. Any rumors to the contrary, whispered or printed, are without foundation."

State Rights Sales

Samuel Sax, president and general manager of Lumas Film Corporation, has just sold the following territories: Progress Pictures, Inc.—Six Gotham Productions and "Defying the Law," Cleveland, O.; De Luxe Feature Film Company—Six Gotham Productions, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana.

Arrow announces the following: "The Lost Chord" has been sold to Merit Film Corporation for territory of Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. "Lena Rivers" has also been sold to Merit for the same territory. "Days of '49" sold to American Booking Corporation of Detroit for Lower Peninsula of Michigan. New series of Broadway Comedies and Mirthquake Comedies sold to Progress Pictures Company, Cleveland, for Ohio and Kentucky. The following sold to Sam Grand of Boston for New England States: 18 Richard Hatton westerns; 4 Pinto Petes; "Lena Rivers." The new series of Broadway Comedies and Mirthquake Comedies sold to Progress Features, 'Frisco, for territory of California, Arizona, Nevada and Hawaiian Islands.

W. Ray Johnston, President of Rayart Pictures Corporation, announces the following sales of Rayart Product:

A. H. Blank Enterprises of Kansas City concluded negotiations the end of the week with Thomas A. Curran, Rayart's Western Representative, for the series of Harry J. Brown comedy-dramas starring Reed Howes for Western Missouri and Kansas; and the Merit Film Corporation of New York City secured the rights for the Harry J. Brown melodrama special, "Easy Money," and also the Butterfly Comedy Series for greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Toledo Slump Hits Theatres; Temple Slashes Admissions

INCREASE in car fare to ten cents coupled with the thousands out of employment in this city the past two weeks is reported to have created havoc to the theatre business in Toledo, O., this month. Only one house reports showing a profit while the Temple Theatre has been hit so hard that Dr. Horater announces a big reduction in prices to ten, twenty and thirty cents.

"It's no use talking the movie picture prices will have to come down if the theatre owner is going to make any money. This is not only true of Toledo but all over the country," says Dr. Horater.

"I've tried everything, big features together with educational features besides a good comedy, news reel with an orchestra for fifty cents top, but still we have been forced to play to empty seats so I decided to cut my prices to 10, 20, 30 and still give the patrons the high class bill that for which they have been paying the high prices."

Negotiations are under way by a group of Toledoans to secure Loew's Valentine when the lease expires, which is said to be next September. Loews, it is said, has dropped $25,000 a year. The property, which is owned by E. D. Libbey, is under the control of Attorney Charles Friedman. Loew's lease with Friedman calls for a rental of $25,000 a year and the theatre to furnish its own heat. The group of Toledoans are willing to pay this price but Friedman is trying to hold out for $35,000 a year and a share of the profits. If they secure the theatre it is their plan to put in only the big super pictures and the rest of the time to play the big theatrical productions.

Stromberg Incorporating

Advices this week from Los Angeles are that the Hunt Stromberg Corporation will be formed in Los Angeles with a capital of $1,000,000. In this connection it is reported that the company will produce eighteen pictures for release through Producers Distributing Corporation. Harry Carey, Priscilla Dean and Stromberg specials will be controlled by the new unit, which will be in the nature of a holding company.

Strand Company Gets Another Troy House

Carrying its fight for patronage another step in Troy, N. Y., the Strand company operating the Mark Strand in Albany, the Troy Theatre and the Lincoln, in Troy, took over on a long term lease last week, the American Theatre, one of the best known motion picture houses in Troy, which has been closed for the last three or four weeks, through financial difficulties encountered by Benjamin Apple, who ran the house for several years. The deal is of much importance in motion picture circles, meaning as it does, another move on the part of the powerful Strand chain to acquire additional houses.

The American is to be given a general overhauling, being redecorated and remodeled. The house may not be reopened until early next fall. Its policy has not been determined but in all probability, it is said, it will go to second-run as a direct competitor with the nearby Griswold, operated by Proctor interests. Both the Troy Theatre and the Lincoln are first-run houses.

Special Two-Reeler with Local Stars Gives Two Weeks Feature to Rosenthal

ONE of the most intelligently worked out local film stunts is reported by Morris Rosenthal, of Poli's Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., working in conjunction with The Golden Bed and another feature. The local film is no new idea, but Mr. Rosenthal worked it so that it gave him a feature for two weeks and an additional week of press work. Mr. Rosenthal's campaign was so good that we are going to reproduce it for the benefit of others.

Of late most of these local productions have been in the nature of a film amateur night, in which the local boys and girls are encouraged to clown through an impromptu scenario and amuse the audience with their blunders. Rosenthal figured that it would be better to get out a real production, and he made an effort to approach professional standards with no little success.

The First Gun

His first shot was an advertisement for talent. This was a two fours and was run outside of the theatrical advertising. It is reproduced here as a good model to be followed.

A MOTION PICTURE SHORT FEATURE WILL BE MADE

On the Stage of The Majestic Theatre and in the Vicinity of Bridgeport

Applicants Wishing to Appear Should Call At The Majestic Theatre Between 12-2 P. M. and 7-9 P. M. Tuesday or Wednesday See Mr. Reed

WANTED

Young men—Young Ladies—Elderly Couple—Ballroom Dancing Team—Amateur Orchestra—Specialty Entertainers—Bring Your Latest Photo With You.

Will Consider An Original Scenario Dealing with Bridgeport Social Life

THE FIRST ANNOUNCEMENT

There were no strings tied to the announcement and no voting or tryout schemes. Public tryouts might have brought in a little more immediate money, but Rosenthal was working for the ultimate result and did not want to hurt the dignity of the production by clowning it in the early stages. If you plan a farcical production with raw amateurs, a series of public tryout sessions can be added to make for attendance and at the same time give emphasis to the nature of the stunt, but if you want to work for a real production it is better to do the preliminary work in private, for a tryout will give the picture a comedy touch it cannot live down.

The advertising brought scores of applicants and from the best thirteen local amateurs were selected, with another from Milford and two from Stratford; both feeder towns, making a cast of sixteen.

The scenario of The Modern Girl was written by Myrtle Robacker, a former star in the high school dramatic society. With the cast completed, the advertising was changed to the announcement of the plan, a two fives being used.

YOU WILL SEE A MOTION PICTURE

Actually Being Made next week at the Majestic Theatre when we will film a modern story on our stage with local people in the cast.

A different scene will be filmed each night. An opportunity is offered everyone to see what a Movie Studio looks like.

See the scenes being filmed before you, then see the completed picture on the screen the next week.

THE ADVANCE AD

The stage was set as a studio, with three Kliegs and three overhead lamps, two cameras being used, shooting from opposite angles. Each evening one of the interior scenes was shot in view of the audience, and the daily advertisement carried a special top, with the announcement of the picture below, the entire space being a two sixes. Each day the copy was changed to announce the particular scene to be shot that evening, all of the work in one set being cleaned up.

Meanwhile the papers were running plenty of copy about the stunt. This did not class as theatrical advance. It was local stuff about the boys and girls who were to take part in the production. It was news, not theatrical publicity, and the paper did not mind adding a word or two about the regular program feature.

We will film the surprise shower given to Betty (our heroine) by her girl friends.
We show you scene by scene how a motion picture is made. Then next week you will see the completed picture on our screen.

THE DAILY CHANGE

The result was that more than two weeks were given to the advance, and a great many persons came every night, since there was a change in the attraction if not in the film feature. They wanted to see it all, and so they sat through The Golden Bed for six showings.

But the picture was not made wholly in interiors. There were plenty of outdoor scenes, and these were used for ballyhoo. There was no real necessity for telling the crowds about the picture being made. They had read about it in the papers, but a bannered truck, which carried the outfit, announced that these were outside scenes for The Modern Girl and that the interiors were being made before the audiences at the Majestic.

THE STAGE SET FOR ONE OF THE SCENES IN THE PLAY

Making a local production at the Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., brought in a lot of extra money to the house, and Morris Rosenthal handled it so well that it was a real feature and not merely a crude comedy. It made money.

Here's O. T. Taylor With Us Once More

Probably you will recall O. T. Taylor, who a few years ago contributed a lot of good stories on building lobby displays. All of a sudden he dropped out of sight, but he dropped in—by mail—the other day and promises to come in often.

In the interval the Weir Theatre has grown into the D. & R. Theatres Company, Inc., and Mr. Taylor has climbed up to the position of Assistant Manager to Mr. Dolal, who is the "D" of the new company, which has four houses in Aberdeen, Wash., and three in Hoquiam.

In his new position Mr. Taylor does not find it possible to use the hammer and the glue brush as he use to do. Now he supervises the work of others, but he has on his staff Lindgren, who gave us a couple of stories on airbrush work about a year and a half ago, and a Mr. Emery, who has yet to make his name, but who promises to come into the limelight very promptly.

With four out of six theatres in a town of 20,000, Mr. Taylor has to hustle to fill all the seats, particularly the Weir, which can care for 1,600. He makes one big lobby a week on the most promising title, and ballys for the rest. He promises to keep his stuff coming.

Had to Double Prizes

A recent stunt was worked on a belated showing of Girl Shy. He worked a crossword on this and received so many answers that he doubled the number of prizes. Then he put all the replies into a window and offered tickets to those who could make the closest estimate as to the number of replies received, the box for the estimates being placed beside the window. Between the two stunts he opened to a standout and kept it there for the run. He is seldom as late as this playing a picture, and some he gets even ahead of Seattle, but he prefers to play after the key city, to get the advantage of that advertising.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Cecil B. DeMille's "The Golden Bed," running 1 hour and 30 minutes, was put with 3 musical presentations and the usual Mark Strand Topical Review. This brought the complete show up to 2 hours and 6 minutes, with the review requiring 8 minutes and the musical material 28 minutes.

As Lincoln's Birthday fell during the week, a special incident was devised. Besides this, there was a ballet presentation, and a third musical number was a Revue Populaire.

The Lincoln incident opened with a film announcement, while the orchestra played Hasmer's "Southern Rhapsody." During this orchestral prelude, 2 steel blue Mestrum floods from the booth covered the musicians, while a soft moonlight blue flood was put on the motion picture screen from the booth. Foots and borders of the large stage in blue. With the concluding note of the "Southern Rhapsody," the silver draw curtains of the small stage opened, revealing a levee setting in the moonlight. Centre stage was the Mark Strand Mixed Quartette. All were dressed in the costumes of Lincoln's time. First, the tenor sang "Ma Li'l Batteau," by Strickland, and this was followed by "Oh Suzanna" (Foster), sung by soprano and baritone. Next came a mezzo soprano solo, "Lindy Lou," after which the incident was closed by the soprano and mezzo soprano singing "Dixie" as the baritone and tenor sang "Swanee River" as a counter melody. Toward the finish of this quartette number all front lighting dimmed off and white lights from behind the transparency drop brought up a huge picture of Lincoln with outstretched hands. This made a very strong finish for the number, which took 9 minutes in its presentation.

The ballet presentation was the well-known "Czardas" from Delibes' "Coppelia." The 8 girls wore Hungarian peasant costumes of various colors. The background was the gold draw curtains upon which red and amber spots were thrown from the sides. Two orange spots flooded the lower part of the production stage from the dome, and near the end of the dance these floods came up to white. The orchestra stage was in blue, with 2 moonlight blue floods on the musicians from the booth. This dance took 4 minutes.

Following the Topical Review, running 8 minutes, came the Revue Populaire, 15 minutes long. This preceded the photoplay. The setting used was a balcony interior for which a neutral blue background served as sky with stars showing. Three steps led down from the balcony platform to the stage proper. A working fountain was seen centre stage and other properties included mirror mosaic vases, upon which were played varicolored spots from the sides. The act ran as follows: lyric soprano centre stage, dressed as a Spanish senorita, while grouped about her were 8 girls of the ballet dressed as Spanish chevaliers, each with a guitar. The soprano sang "A Night in Grenada," as the dancers did various bits of pantomime and "business." The second selection was "I Wonder What's Become of Sally," sung by a lyric tenor. The second chorus of this, the dancers, who in the meantime had changed to party frocks, came on for a brief dance, with a tenor coming in on the last measure for a close. The third number was "Honest and Truly," sung by a mezzo soprano. Next came a dance by the premiere danseuse, to the music of "Tea for Two." Then came "Peter Pan, I Love You," sung by a baritone, with the dancers dressed in Peter Pan costumes. The incident closed with "Where's My Sweetie Hiding," by the Mixed Quartette and Ensemble. Open box lamps of blue lighted the transparency back-drop, while Mestrum floods of blue were thrown on the set from the dome.

Quick Action

Down in Birmingham, Ala., a young woman who was arrested for speeding assaulted the arresting officer. C. D. Haug, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, was there helping Loew's State Theatre on He Who Gets Slapped.

When he heard of the incident he hustled over to the Post and induced the kindly editor to handle it as a local version of He, and the picture got a real news story, since the slapper was socially prominent and the slappee an officer of the law.

Haug insists that he was not an accessory before the fact.

A BOOK STORE TWICE REMOVED AND RESET THE PLATE GLASS FRONT FOR THIS DISPLAY ON THE LEFT

This was in Fort Worth, Texas. The display could not be set in through the rear, so the plate glass front was removed, the display set in the glass returned, to be taken out again at the end of the run. The merchant felt it was worth the trouble. The dry goods store display on the right is in three sections, the back, the ship and the frame. Done by Harry Burke, of the Palace.

PUTTING LLOYD INTO HOT WATER HELPED BREAK RECORDS

H. B. Clarke, of the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., got a three-way record on this comedy —attendance, receipts and profit—but a midnight matinee helped to gain this result, though this lobby display backed up the general impression.

Midnight Matinee Helped to Record

Breaking attendance or receipts records may not be as profitable as getting under the record with a better priced picture, but H. B. Clarke, of the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., got a new profit record, too, when he played Harold Lloyd in Hot Water for his New Year's attraction.

He built his own lobby cutout, based on a lithographic head, and backed this on the banner with a pair of teapots. Here it might have helped to have run streams from the spouts into the tub, but it really was not necessary.

One of the factors in the record making was a well handled midnight matinee on New Year's Eve. Mr. Clarke persuaded the local paper to sponsor this, and the News took hold of the idea two weeks in advance, the general idea that the paper wanted to arrange a celebration for its readers. It worked so well that the house was practically sold out before the date. Everyone thought it was a great lark and they packed in to the legal capacity.

His New Years Ad a General Appeal

A. E. Bennett, of the Liberty Theatre, Muncie, Ind., sends in his New Years advertisement a trifle late, but the idea is so good that we want to put it on record for the benefit of the wise managers who keep seasonal scrap books.

He took a little more than three twelves to greet his public, to tell them that the New Year was a time for fresh starts and to announce that the Liberty programs would be better than ever through 1925.

And he doesn't merely say they will in general terms. He lists nearly fifty titles, to prove that he knows what he is talking about, with a special panel for the comedies and a big appeal for the Fight and Win series.

Many of the titles have a couple of explanatory lines and the entire effect of the advertisement is to suggest that Mr. Bennett is talking by the book and not through his hat. It is not a bunch of unconvincing adjectives, but a sound and serious analysis of the season's plans. It is one of the best announcements we have seen in a long time and we regret that the copy is too ample to stand reproduction here.

But here's the good tag line: "A Happy New Year and may the Grace of Courage, the Joy of Victory and Success be yours.

Saving Tinker

Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, got a new version of the ten-names stunt for Peter Pan. You'll recall that Tinker Bell's life is saved when the audience expresses its belief in fairies. Bill helped Miss Smythe, manager of the Elite Theatre, Defiance, Ohio, draw up a card on which five adults testified to their belief in fairies. The youngsters got the signatures and the filled in cards were good for an admission at a matinee.

It advertised Peter and checked up the mailing list at the same time.

Had a Ship

Making a lobby display out of the piratical craft of Capt. Hook was one of J. G. Evins stunts for the Lucal Theatre, Savannah, Ga. The ports were illuminated from inside and there was an illuminated title at the base. After the run opened the ship was transferred to a vacant store because they needed the lobby space for the record breaking crowds.

His marquise banner was a box sign with illuminated letters topped by a twelve foot compo board alligator with a real alarm clock in its mouth. If you use this, get an electric bell, wire it into the house circuit with a bell attachment and keep it going. He used 500 lamps on the marquise, mostly red, yellow, blue and white.

These and some more general stunts broke the records for New Year's Day.

From the Past

L. W. Carroll has been as quiet as a darkey cemetery after dark of late, but he sends in an old stunt in the shape of a card reading "Closed Christmas Day. We are going to see Rin-Tin-Tin, the wonder dog, at the Majestic."

He gave these to all stores and most of them posted the cards on the doors, because they were going to be closed, just as the sign stated. It's old, but it is good Christmas, Fourth of July, Thanksgiving, and a lot of other holidays.

Another Forty

Add to the famous forties the forty windows gained by the Adams Theatre, Detroit, on He Who Gets Slapped. There were 40—count 'em—40— just like Al Fields Minstrels, and each window had a card and some stills.

Peter Pan Meter is Good for Features

One of the stunts Barry Burke worked for Peter Pan at the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Tex., is good for any picture of unusual appeal. It worked particularly well for him because at the time Texas was in the grip of winter winds, and anything that looked like a thermometer was eagerly consulted.

THE CHANCE METER

The photograph shows the general design. At the base of the bulb the capacity for the week is lettered in on either side of the tube. The right hand side is the "Diminishing chances" and the left the attendance. The total capacity was 42,000, and that sum is marked on both sides of the bulb.

The attendance the opening day was 7,136, so the diminishing chance had decreased to 34,864. Tuesday drew 5,987, which cut the diminishing chances to 28,877. This stunt not only told of the big business done, but it gave emphasis to the narrowing of the opportunity, wherein it differs from the usual attendance register. It's an improvement on the old idea, but keep it for pictures where you expect to play close to capacity, and even then you may have to juggle the figures a little.

Mr. Burke also dressed one of his ushers as Peter and put her in the lobby to distribute literature. Ordinarily a girl in tights might have offended, but Peter really isn't a person at all, and so it was all right. She also worked in a store window where there was a big Peter Pan display, but her best pull was the advertisement urging parents to send or bring their children to see the live Peter, on the lines of the department store Santa Clauses.

A STRIKING USE OF THE CUTOUT ON SINNERS IN SILK

A special police permit was necessary to use this figure from the 24-sheet at the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., but it was worth all the trouble it caused J. L. Shields because it brought some unusually good results.

Editor Kadow

Add F. M. Kadow, of the Mikadow Theatre, Manitowoc, Wis., to the list of editorial writers, for he has swung his program into a halfsize four pager that is not written entirely with the scissors and paste brush. He uses a lot of clip on his current attractions, but he realizes that the chief value of a newspaper lies in the house talk, and uses plenty of that. He reserves half of the last column of the back page for his mail address space and this is printed up with the Post Office permit, so the sheet can be locally mailed without the cost of a wrapper.

He retains the stunt of giving five free admissions each day, naming the lucky persons in the advertisement of the attraction for that day, and he offers a new one on a children's matinee.

In this he gives admission to any child under ten who presents a 1910 penny, brightly polished. He figures that the hustle to get a coin of the proper date will advertise the picture to the adults.

THE INDIAN ATTRACTED ATTENTION FOR NORTH OF 36

H. C. Farley dug him up to ballyhoo for the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala. As Indians are scarce in that country the stunt got a lot of attention for the picture. North of 36 is not an Indian picture, but there are Indians in it.

Real Redskin is Good Attractor

Real Indians are scarce in and around Birmingham, Ala., so a sure-for-certain Indian, mounted and leading a second pony with a travoise got a lot of attention for North of 36 when H. C. Farley put him out in the interest of the Strand Theatre.

It might perhaps be objected that North of 36 does not class as an Indian story, though there are plenty of Indians in it, but this does not matter so long as the Indian is a good attractor, and he was because the town has seen few Indians since the Wild West shows went out of currency.

If you can get a couple of ponies you can work the same stunt with a made-up Indian, and a little papoose on the travoise will more than double the value of the idea. You will note that a string of bells around the led pony's neck adds to the attraction value of the stunt.

Maroons Buster on a Bell Buoy

Attracting enough attention to get newspaper notice, J. L. Shields, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., animated his display for The Navigator.

Instead of a cutout, he made his own display with Buster on a Bell Buoy in a section of the ocean. It was mounted upon a rocker base so that the buoy apparently responded to the heave of the swell, and each time it rocked a bell tolled in very realistic fashion.

It really was a local sensation and contributed importantly toward unusually good ticket sales. People thought it was a wonderful display so they figured that The Navigator must be an unusually good comedy.

Mr. Shields does not tell how the motor was rigged, but you can figure out some way of hooking up the motor. If you want to make it even better, make a separate head for Buster and put this through a slot cut into the collar. Then carry a weight, pendulum-wise, well down below the pivot, so that the head will apparently swing to and fro. By broadening the belt you can animate the entire upper half of the figure, so that it will apparently be engaged in an effort to preserve equilibrium.

It worked just as it is for Mr. Shields.

Library Display Good Press Work

One of the by-products of the liberary hook-up which is becoming more and more common has been developed by the Cleveland Public Library, which seems easily to be the most alert and energetic organization.

This library gets a write up in the local papers and makes copy out of the various displays made on behalf of the films which may induce readers to call for suggested books.

For example, hooking to the Stillman on Peter Pan gave this comment in a local paper:

"Peter Pan" occupies center stage in the Public library this week. The book displays, "Peter Pan and the Never, Never Land" in the fiction division and "Peter Pan and his Friends" in the children's room, are illuminated by still photographs lent by Paramount.

A showcase exhibition in the literature division shows scenes from the film—also numerous photographs of Maude Adams and Betty Bronson in the title role. In this division are also Barrie's "Peter Pan in Kensington Gardens" and a copy of Harper's Weekly containing Charles Frohman's "The Man With the Magic Pen."

The book marker used in this connection carries eleven titles of fairyland fiction and four books of verse, all of which may be had from the library.

The Thief of Badgad carried eight fiction titles, four volumes of play and verse, four travel books, the life of Burton and one other title. The Cleveland institution does not merely advertise the film or the book from which the film has been made. It advertises the library, and we'll wager that many readers found the life of Burton as interesting as any fiction they ever read, and so may be led to other biographical works, which is what the Library was aiming for.

Felice is fertile in ideas and has materially assisted in the exploitation of a number of late First Nationals through the injection of some local angle.

Puts Much Talk in Contracted Space

A three sevens is not much of a display in some towns, but its more than a lot in Chicago, where the heavy line rate makes advertising a big consideration, but Balaban and Katz have done a lot in this allowance because values are so well figured. Theatres would waste all of this space, and even more, on a display cut. Here two small singles work just as hard as one larger cut and still have room to get a big display for a title that really is a best seller, thanks to the fact that is carries only five letters. It also gives Miss Moore her prominence through holding down the lines above and below. Six additional members of the cast are mentioned, the stage show is exploited in full and there still is room over at the left to tell about the departing attraction and the Sunday organ concert with two players at the console. It even gets over the flavor of the play with those costume sketches and gives the author a play-up through isolating her name to the left of the cut, where the eight point lines have as strong a value as would 18 point sunk into the body of the display. This entire space is a nice study in relative values. There are few big lines and yet the facts are put over forcefully and completely. In such work you need the cooperation of a good printer, but if you can get this you will save a lot of money and still get better results than with larger faces in larger spaces. This is an exceptionally good display both as to text, illustration and display.

A First National Release

Trimming the Cut Gets Good Results

In this advertisement of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, the regular plan book cut in the upper left appears to have been sliced to make it fit a smaller space, and the result is as good, if not better, than would have resulted from the use of the entire cut. There is a hairline rule at the right which may have been on the cut. If it was, it could be trimmed off with profit, and that portion of the space would then have appeared to be larger, and therefore more prominent. It would not seem that so light a line could have much effect, but it does contract the space. This cut seems to have been intended for a three column space. It is better in the two column width in this three by ten. The essential part of the drawing is preserved, along with the title. In the larger size it was useful to fill in space, where space was desired, but setting it over into the corner, instead of centering it gives a more compact layout and one that gives a better appearance. Very often you will find that you can trim down a cut to advantage and that a three column cut, cropped, will be better than the two column cut supplied on the title. You do not have to use the cut just as it comes from the press book. A better understanding of this fact will make for better advertising and economy of space. If you have a Metro plan book on He, look this cut up and see how neatly the Valentine has adapted a larger cut to its

Pictorial Smash Is Real Seller

Pictorial advertising is good only when the pictures tell something of the story or suggest the locale. Much pictorial advertising is worth less than the paper it is printed upon, let alone the cost of cuts and space. But this display from the Capitol Theatre, Victoria, B. C., is something different. The top cut gives you the general color, the bottom strongly suggests action and in between is the dash of romance that tells the rest. This space is a little over 18 inches across six, but it is worth the increase because it is calculated to sell a number of additional tickets greatly in excess of the cost. The text is not overstrong, but it adequately backs the cuts and with such good cuts copy is less essential. First National publicity renders good service to exhibitors, but this is rather better than even their high standards. That top cut, alone, should sell the picture, even in the face of other cattle pictures. If you can pass up the sort of picture this cut suggests you probably wouldn't give a nickel to see Harold Lloyd play a passionate love scene with Pola Negri. It is scarcely fair to compare this with advertisements from cities where the space cost is several times that of Victoria, but this is easily the best display yet sent in on Sundown and it is going to take something remarkably good to pass it. The cuts could not be bettered. The copy is susceptible of some improvement.

opinion from the local critics on Captain Blood. It's good; so good that it is a pity they did not take more space and get the idea over better. It is far too small to give value either to the portraits or the opinions, and few will guess that the smudges above the ovals represent the publication building of the various newspapers. No one can get the names of the critics, which are lettered in at the bottom of each oval. Few will even be able to guess that they are there. There is a fine idea here for getting solid with the newspaper men, but it is spoiled through too great an economy of space. It is an instance where economy means waste, for only the lower half of the display is worth much to the house.

no particular interest, and yet we imagine that it did help the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, to get them in. The girl is Inez herself, and her general getup suggests that she must be a pretty fast stepper and that a story about her cannot be particularly tame, so she makes interest for the title, and this is what lines them up out front about half past seven or eight o'clock. First National has used this same general idea on a number of recent pictures, and it seems to have worked well with all. The cut seems to have become standard on this type of picture, and from its frequent use it evidently is favored by the exhibitor. It gives plenty of room for sales talk which is made an intimate part of the cut, and if you do not like what the press agent has written, it is a simple matter to notch the cut and set in your own version.

Three Column Ad Reduces Nicely

This advertisement from the Tower Theatre, St. Paul, is the same size as the original, though in this measure it might be a reduction from the three-column space from which it is originally derived. Apparently the larger display from the press book was cut out, the other text lettered in and the whole reproduced in this size. This works as nicely as though the display had been planned for this space. In a space so small it would not be advisable to try and set in type, but since this seems to be a reduction, it would have been possible to have had these lines set in clear faces of larger size and pasted onto the cut copy. For that matter reproducing only the upper portion of the display and setting the rest in straight type would have worked very nicely. Making the reduction by the line cut process retains the stipples and while this gives a fine screen, the reproduction is better than an original half tone in the same screen would have yielded. Very often a cut will be found in the larger sizes that can be reduced with better results than can be had from a half tone made directly from one of the stills, and the cost will be less since the line cut costs about half what is charged for halftone. The Tower has done well with a three-inch single.

Gets Bold Showing in Two Column Ad

The New Orleans newspaper from which this advertisement of the Saenger Strand Theatre advertisement is taken uses a greasy ink that gives a black, but rather smeary impression. Much that other houses can do is not practical where such a newspaper condition exists, but the house artist has achieved a distinct display for the title through a special drawing for a space only two columns wide through using a heavy reverse band for the title and putting the title into a large letter that can come through the reverse. He knows that he is certain of a strong black. The only trouble is that it is apt to be too strong, so he makes the reverse work to the full and adds a silhouette cut in case the line scene cut falls down. The latter comes through fairly well in this instance, but with this type of ink the silhouette is safest. He uses one small three-line bank of all capitals, but most of the text is upper and lower, to invite the reader. We think that the press agent has done an excellent job on this example.

Virtue's Wages

Guy V. Kenimer supplied the two large department stores in Jacksonville with envelopes for the pay roll the week before he played Gloria Swanson in The Wages of Virtue. They were printed: "Here are your weekly wages. See Gloria Swanson's Wages of Virtue. Arcade next week."

Kenimer started his advertising on this picture when he had Her Love Story, six weeks earlier. He ran the bobbed hair contest on this, with reference to the long hair in the Love Story and the bob in Wages. Since then he had kept the title alive with screen slides and newspaper items, so he sold the play to much better than average.

The local handlers of Manhattan shirts in Fort Smith, Ark., refused to cooperate with the theatre. That did not bother John P. Read, of the Joie Theatre. He switched his hook-up to the Manhattan Cafe and got even more out of it.

"The Man Without a Country"

Fox's Excellent Production of Well-Known Story Should Please Patrons of All Ages and Classes

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

The current season has witnessed an unusual number of noteworthy pictures, and well up in the front rank stands the Fox Film Corporation production, "The Man Without a Country," produced by Rowland V. Lee.

Here is a picture that seems to contain in a large measure the elements of audience satisfaction that spells box-office success. Based on the familiar story of Edward Everett Hale, which is known to nearly every school child, the bigness of its theme and the universality of its appeal is shown by the fact that it has not only endured through the years, but has been translated into many foreign languages.

The keynote of this is found in the fact that its basic idea is one that appeals to all classes and kinds of people and is fundamental in human nature—the love of home and country. Mr. Hale's story played upon this in a masterful manner, and this spirit has been caught in transferring it to the screen.

To begin with, we have here a real story based on a powerful theme. The story of a young soldier whose youthful ambitions and impetuosity led him in the wrong channel and causes him to declare that he never wished to see or even hear the name of the United States again. His wish was granted, and for years he roamed the seas as a prisoner aboard naval vessels, always kept away from shore and with no one allowed to even mention this country in his presence.

How he gradually repented of his folly, and as years rolled on came to love the United States with a passionate devotion and finally, as a very old man dies just after receiving a pardon from President Lincoln and learning about the changes and growth of our wonderful land, furnishes a theme that is poignant in its pathos, powerful in its appeal to patriotism, and intense in its drama.

The very simplicity and straightforwardness of the story and its fidelity to logic enhances the intensity of its play upon the emotions, chief among which is its pathos. The hero's plight elicits an unusual depth of sympathy for, in addition to his deprivation of his native land, there is the beautiful love of his mother and his sweetheart which lasted through the years.

The conventional, happy ending is absent; it would be out of keeping with the story. There is, however, a beautiful and self-sacrificing love, with the sweetheart, now an old woman, passing away after she feels her lifework is ended in securing the pardon and the hero experiencing a peaceful and happy death. There won't be many dry eyes in your audience during these scenes. The only concession here is the use of a phantom effect in showing the couple, as they were when young, reunited in spirit.

The hero's years on the seas and his early career as a soldier offer almost unlimited possibilities for action, and there is no dearth of it, but Director Lee has chosen his episodes with restraint, concentrating on an Indian fight, a storm at sea on an old, wooden frigate, a gala occasion on Decatur's flagship after his success in Tripoli, and a fight with a pirate ship. Every one of these are magnificently handled and intensely realistic and serve to advance the drama. The most spectacular is the fight between the two wooden ships, with hundreds of men in hand-to-hand encounter. This need not fear comparison with similar scenes in other big pictures.

In short, the material side matches the bigness of the theme and story, for we see hundreds of men in action as Indians, soldiers, sailors, pirates, and many ships of various types from Burr's flotilla of barges to large wooden merchantmen and frigates.

Mr. Lee's direction is excellent and every member of the large cast does good work. Edward Hearn, as the hero, is at his best and gives a striking performance. Pauline Starke is excellent as the sweetheart, and the others, too numerous to mention, enter admirably into the spirit of the story and do fine work. Special reference should be made, however, to George Billings in his remarkable characterization of President Lincoln.

With pathos and patriotism as the outstanding appeal of the story and stirring action, romance and comedy relief to back them up in a truly big production, "The Man Without a Country" should appeal to young and old of both sexes alike.

Story

During the turbulent period at the beginning of the nineteenth century, Lt. Nolan, a brave officer at a frontier post, comes under the sway of Aaron Burr, who is planning to establish a new colony in the West, and when Burr is arrested for treason Nolan declines to reaffirm his allegiance to the United States, but says he hopes he will never hear of the United States again. A court-martial gives him his wish and he is placed on a war vessel with instructions that he be kept away from the country and no mention ever made of it in his presence. Years pass, during which he is transferred to ship after ship, and he regrets his rash remark, but to no avail. He is with Decatur at Algiers, renders assistance to the country he has spurned during a storm at sea and in an encounter with a pirate ship loaded with slaves. All this time his sweetheart tries in vain to get him pardoned. The beginning of the Civil War finds him a broken old man, passionate in his love for his country. Realizing that death is near, he begs the captain of the ship to tell him about the United States, and the captain does. Nolan's sweetheart, after appealing to ten presidents finally persuaded Lincoln to pardon him, and just after the receipt of the pardon Nolan dies. At almost the same moment his sweetheart, realizing her life work is ended, also dies.

"Quo Vadis"

First National Offers a Splendid Spectacle in an Italian Production with Emil Jannings

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

"Quo Vadis" was one of the first big pictures to be made. Along with "Cabiria" and "The Inferno" the foreign-made productions in full length made the American invasion while we still clung to the one and two part stories. It was a wonderfull production for those days, but it would not well stand comparison with the present magnificent production by the same director. It is interesting to compare the two versions if only to note the splendid progress made in presentation, lighting and photography in the past few years.

Technically this presentation is unusually good, but, like all spectacles based on heroic plots, there is too much detail to permit of character intimacy. There is too much ground to be covered. The result is that in the earlier portion the story moves but slowly, but works to an exciting and gripping finish. Sold as a spectacle, this should make a great audience picture. It should please the cash customers better than it does the blase managers and critics. But it must be sold as a spectacle.

The acting is almost uniformly fine, though Emil Jannings, best known of the players to American audiences, stands far above the rest. His Nero is interesting and human; an inherent bully whose natural power has been sapped by loose living and gross flattery. Unlike an earlier portrayer of this character, he suggested in his debacle the man who had been a Caesar. He over-emphasized, at times, but he dominated the stage. Lillian Hall Davis was a delightful personality as Lygia and Andree Habay a smooth and agreeable Petronius, while the Ursus of Bruto Castellani was subordinated in this version.

Jannings makes the chief appeal, but he is by no means the only good actor. Even the minor roles are well sustained and there is no poor acting. It is merely that the scenic splendors dwarf mere human action.

Story

Vinicius, a young Roman general, returning from a highly successful campaign against the Parthians, encounters Lygia, a hostage of Nero. His uncle, Petronius, abbiter of elegance at the court of Nero, flatters the debased monarch into giving the girl to the conqueror. But the ardor of Vinicius alarms Lygia, who has turned to the new faith brought to Rome by the Apostle Peter, and she welcomes her rescue by the Christians. The distrait Vinicius, following her, becomes himself a convert to the faith. Nero, burning Rome that he may be moved to write an epic poem, blames the crime upon the Christians and decrees a wholesale slaughter, but the foreign legions have revolted and the revolution is brought to Rome in time to save Lygia, just rescued from the back of a wild bull by her faithful slave, Ursus.

"The Lost World"

Adventure-Romance of Today Brings Prehistoric Mammals to the Screen with Spectacular Vividness

Reviewed by Charles E. Hastings

"The Lost World" assures every theatre owner of a profitable booking.

There has been a lavish expenditure of money, ingenuity and artistry to produce this exceptionally attractive special, and even a "blind booking" should be accepted, in this instance, without hesitancy.

Adventure of the most thrilling sort, romance permeating the entire work, and delightful comedy blend in one of the best audience pictures to reach the screen from any source, at any time.

The story originally set down by the Sussex surgeon thirteen years ago has been torn to shreds, but this story, upon which Mr. Rothacker and Mr. Hudson have expended a great deal of money and thought, and upon which all concerned have done their best work, calls for no apology upon any point. The original story did not lend itself to screen use. The adaptation is ideal. Some of the "locations" are remarkable.

As a result of weaving in the character of "Paula White," the fans will enjoy every moment Miss Love is on the screen. Mr. Beery, of course, takes first honors. (Our "biggest" and "best" pictures seem, in these latter days, incomplete without him.) In this picture Mr. Beery plays the principal role. It is one of his best parts. It may be that he has done nothing better than this. Mr. Hughes also stands up under a strain. His role is not an easy one by any means. Mr. Stone makes every role stand forth, and "Sir John" is not an exception to this rule. The balance of the cast is of an unusually high order (Mr. Cowles makes much of a "bit." It is a way he has).

The production reflects the greatest credit on Watterson Rothacker's judgment. It has been a labor of love with Mr. Rothacker, extending over more than seven years. We feel that he is entitled to the highest honors for sticking it out. The result justifies his every least worry, and the expenditure of every penny he has thrown into it.

Earl Hudson's capacity for supervision again comes in for recognition, and it is supervision of this exceptional variety (the "Hudson touch") that brings "supervision" right out into the foreground, demanding our praise.

Harry O. Hoyt, who directed "The Lost World," does his best work. Nowhere do we point the finger of carping criticism at his share in this magnificent production. Willis O'Brien makes his position in the forefront of technical experts more secure, as a result of his success in 'The Lost World." "The Lost World" possesses all the requirements necessary to place it in the class of "money makers" for exhibitors.

Length, 9,700 feet.

Story

Edward Malone, young reporter, loves Gladys Hungerford. But Gladys tells him that she will marry only a man of great deeds. Edward goes to his editor and begs to be sent on a dangerous mission. The editor is seeking someone with courage enough to interview a certain Professor Challenger, who is forming an expedition to seek a "lost world" in South America. Edward wins the professor's confidence and embarks on his career of adventure and mystery. The Challenger party, after many adventures, comes upon the great plateau upon which live prehistoric monsters and ape-men. They reach the top of the plateau, but find their return cut off by a monster which had destroyed their makeshift bridge. Huge, strange monsters are encountered and after making a thrilling escape they return to England bringing with them a brontsaurus. The great beast breaks loose and creates havoc among the people, and finally crashes through London bridge, landing in the river, and swims out to the ocean and to its freedom. Meantime, Edward and Paula, daughter of an explorer, had fallen in love with each other, but the latter insists that he keep his pledge of love to Gladys. He goes to Gladys and is informed that she has married a clerk. This leaves the reporter and Paula free to marry.

"Taming the West"

Hoot Gibson Provides Fine Heart Interest and Comedy in Universal Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

An editor once told a young writer: "There are so many thousand words in the dictionary, each worth two cents to you. Why worry about plot? All you have to do is to rearrange the words, use new ones."

Hoot Gibson's latest production, "Taming the West," follows the same pattern as many another western story, but it's worth those symbolical two cents a scene—and far more—because it is so skilfully done. All of which may sound like a concealed "roast," but that isn't the idea at all.

In "Taming the West," we have an easterner sent west by an angry father in the hope he will become a man. He had been specializing in late hours and cabarets. The youth strolls into a feud between cattlemen, runs off with the enemy's daughter and proves that he's quite as much at home among fist fighters as on the dance floor.

So you can see that this is a customary western story. But the manner in which it has been filmed, the acting of the entire cast and the smooth, logical development of the story, with great scenes of a racing auto for the climax, make it a fine entertainment picture.

Seldom has Hoot appeared to such good advantage as in this one, not that his pictures aren't uniformly good. He gets a snap and dash into his acting that realize every bit of humor inherent in the role—and there's lots—and as soon as he's shucked the Tuxedo for chaps and a woolen shirt the film starts to move, and the interest keeps on heightening every moment after that. Marcelline Day is effective as the heroine and the others do creditable work. Francis Ford alone is inclined to over-act in a character role as a cowboy.

Story

John Carleton's father sends him west to his ranch to make good. The youth has been jazzing too much for the father's tastes. The cowhands laugh at his golf suit, but John wins their friendship by his plucky riding of a bucking broncho. He falls in love with Beryl King, daughter of an oldtime Montana enemy of his father. He is told to keep off the King ranch but rides there boldly, is attacked and knocks out his opponents with his fists. Still in possession of his nerve, he manages to dance with Beryl at an affair in the village. A few days later he runs away with her in a racing car after stopping to invite her angry father to the wedding. Carleton Senior shows up and effects a reconciliation with King.

"New Toys"

Richard Barthelmess Makes Debut as a Comedian in His Newest Production for First National

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Richard Barthelmess, who has enriched the screen by many excellent dramatic productions, turns his attention to a new field, that of comedy, in "New Toys," his latest production for First National.

Based on a successful stage play, this story deals with the domestic affairs of a young couple and involves the vamping tactics of a former sweetheart of the husband, together with the fiasco made by the wife when she goes on the professional stage. Mary Hay, the well-known musical comedy star, and, incidentally, Mr. Barthelmess' wife in real life, enacts the same role in this picture.

Once having taken the plunge into comedy, Mr. Barthelmess goes the entire route. The picture starts off as a thoroughly enjoyable light domestic comedy with a number of excellent and amusing and thoroughly human situations involving the early married life of the young couple. After a couple of reels a farcical note creeps in, and with the attempt of the wife to make a career as an actress the action becomes broad burlesque when her false nose is knocked out of shape, she purposely overplays the role and finally tripping on her skirt rolls down the steps onto the stage. Farce, burlesque and straight drama, with even the hint of melodrama, alternate from then on, ending in the star's taking a plunge down the steps just as his wife did and coming up with a smudge on his face.

There is some good audience material in this picture, and the story is interesting. The comedy scenes, especially the burlesque, will undoubtedly get laughs from many patrons. However, so abrupt is the change in tempo and the introduction of the broad comedy that it is confusing to the spectator who has no hint of what is to come and finds difficulty in adjusting himself to the change. Once you get into the new spirit of the picture the effect is amusing.

Barthelmess does his best work in the earlier scenes and is effective in the light comedy, but remembrance of his dramatic successes in the past makes him seem out of place in the farcical scene. It is a far cry from his role in "Tol'able David" to his comedy fall and smudged face in "New Toys." Mary Hay makes a good impression as the wife and her ability as a dancer is used to advantage in the earlier scenes. She has a cute and attractive personality. Clifton Webb as a conceited, stage-struck lounge lizzard, who spells art with a capital "A," contributes some excellent comedy in the rehearsal scenes, and the entire cast gives the star good support.

The production details of this picture are high class, but Director John S. Robertson does not seem to be at his best in handling a story of this type. Many of your patrons will find a lot to amuse them in this picture, for there is some excellent comedy. Personally, we much prefer to see Mr. Barthelmess in more serious roles that call for straight drama, and are inclined to believe that the entertainment value of this story would have been increased had the wife's failure on the stage been handled from a straight dramatic instead of a comedy angle.

He does not tell her of Natalie and all goes well until Natalie's return. She starts to vamp Will so hard and arouses the jealousy of Mary to such an extent that when her friend, Tom Lawrence, gets a chance to stage a play and offers her a part she accepts. Will determines to stay away from the opening, but goes with Natalie and sees Mary make a dismal failure as an actress, her built-up nose goes crooked and she falls down the stairway. Lawrence tries to force his attentions on Mary, and Will it nearly crazy as he is unable to find her. After trying all the hospitals he returns to the theatre to get Lawrence and finds him asleep, leaning against the scenery. Finally all is straightened out and Will and Mary are reconciled.

"The Top of the World"

Romantic South African Melodrama Has Remarkable Double Exposure Work and Thrilling Climax

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With James Kirkwood and Anna Q. Nilsson in the principal roles, Paramount is offering "The Top of the World" based on a novel by Ethel M. Dell, who wrote "The Sheik."

The story concerns an English girl who goes to South Africa to marry her sweetheart. She finds him a mental and psysical wreck and for the sake of appearances marries his cousin who is his physical double. Her loyalty to her old love makes her do things which appear compromising and arouse the suspicions of her husband. It all turns out all right, however, with the couple falling in love with each other, but not until after the husband has turned his wife adrift in a raging flood with the other man.

The theme offers interesting theatrical situations which have been handled in a frankly melodramatic manner. Things happen conveniently as the author wishes them and there is a lack of plausibility and convincingness. While the early part of the picture offers good characterizations, especially that of the hero, the melodramatic angle has been played up particularly in the situations involving a sinister doctor, resembling a character in a serial, and in the climax which shows the driving away of the wife, her return and thrilling rescue when the flood sweeps away the house.

There is a rather strong sex situation at one point, the idea being put over entirely in a sub-title as the scene is discreetly handled. The development of the story holds the attention principally because of the work of James Kirkwood in a dual role. Not only does he keep the two characterizations distinct and show different technique in each one, but there are some of the best double exposure scenes ever shown on the screen, where one character is even shown grasping the other by the arm, scuffling on the stairway, etc., with both faces plainly visible at the same time.

Anna Q. Nilsson is excellent in the role of the girl, though this character is not intensely sympathetic. Sheldon Lewis is as sinister as could be desired as the villainous doctor. The remainder of the roles are distinctly subordinate, but Raymond Hatton makes a hit as a silly type of stupid Englishman register strongly.

The climax even if overdrawn dramatically is thrilling and spectacular, and well handled. The sequence where the raging waters destroy the farm and sweep away the houses and the Kaffir farm hands, are very realistic and are there with the punch, and there is nothing stagey about the scene where Kirkwood and Miss Nilsson are swept by the raging torrent and rescued with the assistance of a man on an overhanging limb. The final scenes have been effectively photographed in color.

"The Top of the World," due especially to its rather out of the ordinary theme, the clever double exposure work and the thrilling climax, will probably please the average audience.

Stung by the opposition of her step-mother, Sylvia goes to South Africa to marry Guy Ranger whom she has known for years. She is met by his cousin Burke, who explains that Guy is a mental and physical derelict. Burke befriends her, and she respects him, finally marrying him with the understanding that they will remain but pals. Gradually Burke falls in love with Sylvia, but when she recalls their bargain, he goes and gets Guy, who shoots himself. Sylvia nurses him back to health and he desires her to leave Africa with him, but her eyes have been opened and she no longer loves him. He steals money from Burke and wins at roulette. Sylvia learning this goes to persuade him to come home. Burke finds her and misunderstands. A great rain comes and the valley is flooded. Burke places Sylvia and Guy on horseback and sends them out in the storm. Sylvia returns and tells Burke she loves him. The house is swept away but Burke and Sylvia are rescued, and find happiness together.

The Universal-Jewel production, "The Man in Blue," with Herbert Rawlinson and Madge Bellamy, tells the dramatic story of the love of an Irish cop for an Italian girl, of the crookedness of a politician who tries to wed her, and of a Neapolitan who sacrifices his life for her. At the start the atmosphere and good acting awaken interest, and this increases as the plot unfolds. The backgrounds of a foreign quarter of a large city are well done, and a preliminary bit of acting by Cesare Gravina as the Italian florist augurs well for what is to follow.

Schenectady Exhibitor Proves Necessity Is Invention's Ma

T. E. Loomis, owner of the Cozy Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., is a firm believer in the old adage that "necessity is the mother of invention." In connection with his theatre, Mr. Loomis has been making a nice little piece of change on the side by selling pop corn to his patrons. Right there, the trouble started. After the boys had consumed the pop corn, they proceeded to blow up the bags and crack them between their hands. The procedure frightened some of the staid patrons. Mr. Loomis did a little thinking, then journeyed downtown, and bought a cheap punch. Now every bag, before it is filled with pop corn, has from three to four punch holes in the bottom.

Peter C. Vournakis has become manager of the Strand in Watertown, owned by John C. Lamon, who took over the lease last week from Fred Perry, who has been running it for the past year. Mr. Vournakis, one time leased the theatre but disposed of the lease to Charles Sesonske, formerly owner of the Avon in Watertown, now of Johnstown. Mr. Perry has gone with the Robbins interests.

Ben Apple has resigned as secretary of the Albany Zone Committee. His successor has not yet been named. Exhibitors throughout the territory are looking more and more to the Zone Committee for all sorts of information and assistance. J. J. R. McLoughlin, who runs "Jim's" Theatre in Poland, receiving film in poor condition last week, wrote of the headquarters of the Zone Committee asking the secretary to inspect the film on its return to a certain exchange here. Frank E. Green of Castleton was a caller at the Zone headquarters during the week.

Walter Suckno of the Albany and Regent theatres in the Capital City has both ideas and nerve to execute them or at least make the attempt. The other day, Mr. Suckno showed up at the Hotel Ten Eyck with a large frame containing a lithograph of a picture which he was running at the Albany Theatre, asking the manager if he might display it in the lobby of the exclusive hostelry. Mr. Suckno is doing plenty of exploitation and is packing the Regent to its doors one night a week with amateur acts along with his pictures.

"When's the next train to Utica?" is the invariable remark of John Augello of the Family Theatre in Utica, every time he hits Film Row. Mr. Augello is an extremely busy man, generally coming into town on one train, losing the next one back, but managing to catch the one that follows. He was in town the past week, booking for his house as well as the National Catholic Welfare Hall in Utica.

Does Jake Rosenthal of the Rose Theatre in Troy believe in signs? May be he does and maybe he doesn't. Anyway, there is a sign in his private office with the following significant wording: "Say it with hootch. The flowers come later."

The Mark Strand in Albany is doing its best these days to bring about less talking on the part of patrons, not only during the feature picture but also during the musical numbers, the news reel and the comedy. At every show a slide is running asking patrons to refrain from talking and ending by "We all thank you."

Little Falls may be a bit of a hick town to many, but Bob Wagner of the Gateway Theatre gives it the atmosphere of Old Broadway as he appears each night at his theatre wearing a dress suit and looking, as one of the women said, "fit to kill." Mr. Wagner is wondering exactly how he should take the remark.

Jake Golden of Harmanus-Bleecker Hall in Albany did a good stroke last week, when he landed Stephen Boisclair as his organist. He probably paid a pretty penny, but Mr. Boisclair is worth it and has been a contributing factor in drawing crowds to the Leland. Mr. Golden is using much newspaper advertising these days and the change from burlesque to pictures at the Hall appears to have been a wise one.

Not content with his recent financial worries, Ben Apple of the King Theatre in Troy is deliberately seeking worries of a different sort; in fact, putting himself out of the way in order that he may indulge in a new worry. Yes, crossword puzzles.

A brother of the late William Berinstein, who was at the head of a chain of houses in Elmira, Troy, Albany and Schenectady, was in Albany last week on business from Los Angeles, where he has a theatre.

Location goes a long ways towards a theatre's success, and the fact was never better illustrated than one day last week when a friend inquired of Jake Rosenthal of the Rose in Troy how he was getting along.

Daniel Macksay, former owner of the Star in Herkimer and one of the real old timers in the business, passed away last week.

"My business is as good in the summer as in the winter," replied Mr. Rosenthal, "and I am playing to capacity business these days. It holds up in summer, for my house is located in a neighborhood where the homes are without porches or yards and I keep my theatre, with fourteen fans going, cooler than the sidewalks. There is the answer."

The Rose will observe its second anniversary Easter Week. During St. Patrick's Week, Mr. Rosenthal will run a straight week of what he terms "Paddy pictures."

Someone has been unkind enough to dud Charles Sesonske of the Grand in Johnstown, who weighs about 120 pounds, "Hercules Sesonske." The nickname doesn't worry Mr. Sesonske a bit, for he is playing to capacity day in and day out, running burlesque each Wednesday night, the show jumping from Elmira to Johnstown and thence into Schenectady.

"Al" Lemay of the Lincoln in Troy was tempted to do something desperate last week when he found a film "patched" by the simple expedient of using an ordinary pin. On another occasion Mr. Lemay found that someone had stuck a wad of gum against the film.

What's all this about Bill Smalley of Cooperstown, Oneonta and the Lord knows where, taking over Shaul's Theatre in Richfield Springs? That's the talk, and you know Mr. Smalley has the habit.

Rae Candee of Utica gave a couple of wheezes last week and then threw up the sponge, as he went home sick with the grippe. A couple of doses of "quinine and" brought Mr. Candee back to Nate Robbins, and the latter was able to journey up to Watertown and look things over.

Here's wishing we were with you, Mike

Buffalo, N. Y., Exhibitor News

A fifteen year lease has been taken on the Majestic Theatre in Hornell, N. Y., by Nikitas Dipson and John R. Osborne of Batavia, N. Y., and James Cranides of Olean, N. Y. The new owners will take possession March 1. A sum approximating $150,000 is said to have been involved in the transaction. Mr. and Mrs. Fred F. Peters built the Majestic in 1912 and have been operating it since. The new owners plan to enlarge as well as remodel the house and install a large orchestral organ. Messrs. Dipson and Osborne operate the New Family and Grand at Batavia, while Mr. Cranides is head of Affiliated Theatres of Olean. It is reported that Messrs. Dipson and Cranides plan to get control of a chain of houses in Western New York.

Al Beckerich, manager of the Loew's State, again was chairman of the Milk Fund drive in Buffalo theatres last week. Every house in town co-operated in the movement to provide canned milk for the suffering children of the Near East. Barrels were placed in lobbies and it did not take long to fill them.

It is rumored that the J. Meyer Schine Theatrical Corporation is negotiating for the lease of the new theatre that the Farber Brothers are erecting in Batavia, N. Y., and which will be ready for opening in April.

As a special music attraction this week, Manager Arthur L. Skinner of the Victoria presented Henry M. Hoffman in a series of comparison recitals with the Steinway Duo-Art, through the courtesy of Denton, Cottier & Daniels. Mr. Hoffman will appear in other Buffalo community theatres.

Fred Strasser of the Emblem Theatre, an East Side Community theatre, was fined $25 for the alleged admission of a child under 16 unaccompanied to the house.

Charlie Hayman is enlarging the stage of the Strand, Niagara Falls, so that the house can better accommodate the big acts in the Pantages vaudeville which he has added to his bill.

Employes of the Victoria Theatre held a banquet and dance on the stage of the popular West Side community house on February 17. Manager Arthur L. Skinner acted as master of ceremonies and Walter Hays, president of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y., was the guest of honor.

Kallet, if by any chance you read this little squib as you sit beneath the waving palms on the Florida east coast. Mr. Kallet, who runs the Madison in Oneida, left for the South on Monday.

There was a time when Sam Hochstim of the Star in Hudson could be found around the theatre or the hotel lobby or the Elks Club after hours. But that's no more. Exhibitors see but little of Mr. Hochstim, as he trots straight home from the theatre. Yes, he was married a couple of months or so ago.

There is no fooling Thomas Shean of the Rialto in Massena when it comes to the wording of contracts. Mr. Shean is a lawyer as well as an exhibitor, weighs about 220 pounds and looks powerful enough to shoulder almost any sort of a situation and get away with it. He was along Film Row last Wednesday.

Walter Hays of Buffalo, president of the New York State M. P. T. O., spent last Thursday in Albany. Mr. Hays said that business was up to normal in the cities in which he operates, with the exception of Syracuse, which has been off for the past five months. In company with Jules Michaels, Mr. Hays was in Syracuse on Monday at a luncheon at the Hotel Onondaga, as part of a program to enlist the membership of the Syracuse exhibitors in the Buffalo zone. Mr. Hays said that 99 per cent. of the exhibitors of the city attend and that they joined to a man, Syracuse contributing about $1,000 to the expense of maintaining the Zone.

What a howl has been going up from the Troy Theatre during the last few days. Five of its employes dug down in their jeans to the extent of $5.30 apiece. It all came about when Benjamin Stern organized a team consisting of Gamble, Anderson, Burleigh, Miles and himself to bowl what was considered an ordinary team from the Elks. Little more need to be said as to the score.

Southward they wing their way. "Al" Elliott, who has the Rialto and the Playhouse in Hudson, leaves on March 1 for Daytona, Fla., to become the guest of O. S. Hathaway, a former exhibitor who had houses in Middletown, Oneonta, Binghamton and elsewhere, and who is "worth all kinds of it."

The Schine brothers booked two serials the past week for their entire circuit, these being "Galloping Hoofs" and "Idaho." Both Meyer and Louis Schine, as well as Ben Davis, were down from Gloversville for the Naked Truth Dinner in New York, Albany contributing Frank S. Hopkins and "Alec" Herman.

Max M. Gutstadt, manager of the Lyceum Theatre in Ithaca, died last week after a brief illness. Mr. Gutstadt came to Ithaca from Syracuse about thirty-five years ago and was the first manager of the Lyceum. Later he became its owner, selling out his holdings a short time ago but continuing as manager.

Women residents of the Pine Hills section in Albany play so much bridge these days that C. L. Gardner of the Pine Hillls Theatre is running matinees on Saturday afternoons only. Mr. Gardner reaps a harvest throughout the entire year from his ice cream and candy stand in the lobby of the theatre, but refuses to yield to the persuasive talk of any automobile salesman. Mr. Gardner, without so much as a blush, declared last week that he intended to run his present car until it fell apart.

Paul Revere has nothing on Tony Veiller of the Lincoln Theatre in Troy when it comes to midnight rides. Tony journeys back to Albany every night after the theatre closes, using a car which he recently bought for $75 in negotiating the eight miles. The other night the fog was so thick that it could be cut with a knife and Tony took something more than an hour to cover the distance. His car has what he terms "a mother-in-law's seat" in the back.

Fine Weather Brings Showmen To Pittsburgh; All Optimistic

The spell of beautiful weather experienced in Pittsburgh recently evidently had an effect on out-of-town exhibitors, for they came to Film Row in droves. Looked like there was a convention in town, so many of the theatre owners coming in to transact business at the exchanges. The best part of it all was the general air of optimism among them. On all sides were heard expressions that business is going along pretty nicely, with prospects looking good for the next few months, as in many towns, mills and mines that have been shut down for some time are again beginning to operate. Among the out-of-towners seen on the Row were:

George Panagatocas, Johnstown; George Communtzis, Morgantown; Wm. Gray, Monongahela City; Carl Becker and F. L. Farman, Butler; Joseph Bell, Fayette City; C. M. McCloskey, Uniontown; Michael Rosenbloom and "Bobby" Coyle, Charleroi; J. George Schweitzer, Titusville; Tom Wright, Brownsville; Harry Petz, Youngwood; B. W. Redfoot, Windber; M. Roth, Phillipsburg; Paul Thomas, Greensburg; John McKenery, West Newton; O. J. Sybert, Moundsville; Pete Parros, Erie; S. A. Nesbit, Sr., Rochester; A. Farkas, Johnstown; S. Crangi, Koppel; Sam Bianco, Clymer; C. B. Pascoe, Somerset; James Retter, California; Ben Burke, New Castle; Sam Haimovitz, New Kensington; John Perino, Arnold; Barth Dattola and Guy Ida, New Kensington; Charles Feinler, Wheeling; Jake Silverman, Altoona; Walter Silverberg, Greenville; John Schweitzer, Natrona; B. E. Cupler, Sam Lichter and Nat Walken, Washington; Wm. Wheat, Sewickley; Nick Anas, Wellsburg; Jack Mapel, Pt. Marion; Maurice Baum, State College, and Mr. and Mrs. Tom Kinney, Franklin.

A. S. Davis, general manager of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, announces a novel popularity contest, the prizes for which are free trips to Atlantic City. Eleven young women and their mothers, or anyone else whom they may choose, will be given free trips to the great American seaside resort, one each from the eleven Rowland and Clark theatres in Pittsburgh and vicinity. The details of the plan were evolved by Milton D. Crandall, head of the publicity department for the R. & C. theatres. The main object of the contest is the selling of book tickets.

ELINOR GLYN

The new Elkins Theatre, which is a part of the newly constructed Moose Building at Elkins, W. Va., has been opened, with C. P. Hendrick in charge.

Employes of the Columbus Amusement Company, New Kensington, met at the Liberty Theatre recently to organize a mutual welfare and social association operated by themselves to receive the full co-operation of the management. A committee composed of the following was appointed to draw up a constitution and working agreement: Mr. Bellingham, Mr. Shepard, Mrs. Young and Miss Morgan from the Liberty; Mr. Michelich from the State; Mr. Clinton from the Columbus; Mr. McCloskey from the Imperial; Miss Moore of the executive offices, who will act as temporary secretary to the committee.

Warren B. Dygert, Sr., former Pittsburgher and father of Warren B. Dygert, Jr., managing director of the Kenyon Theatre, and H. B. Dygert, publicity director for Loew's Aldine, passed away at his home in Roselle Park, N. J., on February 4, at the age of 62 years. Several days later the father of Mrs. Warren B. Dygert, Jr., who lived directly across the street from the senior Dygert, was called by death.

Sam Gould is remodeling and enlarging the Gould Theatre on the North Side, most of the improvements being made to the front of the house. The work started on February 9 and will take about five weeks to complete. The alterations are being made without closing the house.

Iowa

The Jewel Theatre, Anthon, Ia., has been repaired and re-opened since its recent fire. C. F. Lyons is proprietor.

Lyman & Grove have sold the Wonderland at Newell, Ia., to Peter Madsen.

J. W. Cutshall, Dubois, Ia., has sent out a notice to the people of the town that unless they support the theatre better he will close.

C. W. Morgan has sold the Palace Theatre in Murray, Ia., to Harry G. Shields. W. H. Mills has bought the Princess Theatre at Montezuma, Ia., of F. E. Bryant.

D. S. Litson has bought the Empress Theatre at Chelsea, Ia., from Frank Adams.

George Adams has bought the Grand Theatre at Cedar Rapids, Ia.

Bravely Averts Panic

The cool-headedness of Clayton Sipple, projectionist, and members of the orchestra averted a panic in the Strand Theatre, Erie, Pa., the other night when fire which started in a store next door filled the theatre with smoke and drove several hundred people into the street. Sipple stuck to his post, and after binding a wet handkerchief over his nose and mouth, continued to run the picture until Manager Fordham informed him everyone was out of the house. Then Sipple collapsed and was taken home. The orchestra also continued to play as the house was filling with smoke. Calmed by the coolness of Sipple and members of the orchestra, the audience filed from the Strand in an orderly manner.

Texas

Sex pictures are most harmful to children and also for adults, so W. E. Paschall, manager of the Palace and Elanany theatres at El Paso, Texas, told the Parents-Teachers Association at that place. He advised non attendance when immoral pictures are shown at a theatre.

M. L. Levine, owner of the Ideal and Majestic theatres at Corsicana, Texas, has purchased the Palace, Grand and Sen theatres at that place and installed T. B. Noble as general manager.

A. V. Wade, who has taken over the Greenhill Theatre at Gainesville, Texas., has closed the theatre for improvements. A cooling system and a new organ costing $10,000 will be added to the equipment.

Manager Ballinger of Ennis, Texas, has disposed of his interests to Manager Cooper of Ennis, Texas, who will operate two shows.

Cranfil H. Cox has purchased the Crystal Theatre at Gilmer, Texas.

W. F. Jones of Archer City, Texas, has purchased the Queen Theatre at Olney, Texas, from Manager Richardson, who retires.

Mrs. Mary McNeese has purchased the Itasca Theatre at Alice, Texas.

Jack Lilly has opened his new theatre at Greenville, Texas.

A. Simon will build a new $75,000 theatre and store building at Brenham, Texas.

Cincinnati

The Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, recently played "Kara," a mystic act, in addition to the regular picture program. It resulted in quite an advance in receipts for the week.

The Cozy Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, has changed hands, now being under control of R. B. Wilkinson. M. C. Barth formerly had the house.

There is a rumor going the rounds that a new movie house to cost in the neighborhood of $200,000 is to be erected at Middletown, Ohio, by Cincinnati capital, but no verification of the rumor can be secured.

According to architectural reports, a new theatre is to be erected at Portsmouth, Ohio, and although plans are in process of development, the exact site as well as the name of the owner are being withheld. The estimated cost is reported at $200,000.

W. T. Arnos, South Euclid, Ohio, will erect a new house at the corner of Mayfield and Green streets, to cost $150,000.

From a list of 300 names submitted for a new theatre recently opened at Ravenna, Ohio, the name of Ohio was selected, the winner receiving a prize of $25.

C. C. King of Piqua, Ohio, has been appointed managing director of May's Opera House in that city. Gordon Hake will be retained as manager of the house.

Canada

George A. Graham, manager and owner of picture theatres and exchanges in Winnipeg, Manitoba, for thirteen years, will build a suburban picture theatre on Portage avenue in the St. James district. The new house is to cost $30,000. He has organized it as a joint stock company with many residents of the neighborhood taking shares in the enterprise. Construction has been started.

J. E. Lynch, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Regina, Sask., and Mrs. Lynch were recently given a surprise party at the theatre and presented with an engraved silver tea service, the gift of the Capitol staff and a mark of appreciation for cordial consideration.

J. C. Kennedy, formerly manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, and more recently in charge of the Capitol Theatre, Peterboro, Ontario, has been transferred to Fort William, Ontario, by Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto, where he is now the manager of the Orpheum Theatre.

Leonard Bishop, manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, has adopted the "conversational style" of newspaper advertising for attractions at the theatre. This comes in the form of a personal statement, worded in breezy manner, set up in two column width and signed by the name of the manager.

Elwood Hall Jones, former manager of the Playhouse Theatre, Winnipeg, was arrested February 13 by Winnipeg detectives on the charge of defrauding the Provincial Government out of $103 for amusement tax collected at the theatre. The Playhouse opened a short time ago but closed again after a short period.

The Columbia Theatre, a thriving neighborhood theatre in Ottawa, of which W. H. Maynard had been the proprietor for some time past, has been offered to prospective exhibitors on a leasehold basis by James S. Wilson, 256 Kent street, Ottawa.

J. M. Franklin, manager of the B. F. Keith Theatre, Ottawa, was elected a director of the Ottawa Humane Society at the annual meeting of the organization at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, on February 12.

South Dakota

The Liberty Theatre at Faith, S. D., was destroyed by fire recently. O. W. Kelly is the proprietor. Loss to surrounding buildings is alleged to be $50,000.

The Strand Theatre at Donald, S. D., has been purchased by Russell Sawyer, and the name has been changed to the Sawyer Theatre.

The Columbian is a new theatre opened at Ipswitch, S. D., by M. D. Sheldon. The new house has a seating capacity of 250.

Detroit

John H. Kunsky, who is spending the winter in Miami, Florida, with Mrs. Kunsky and their daughter, Myrtle, is planning to enter his speed boat in the approaching National Speed Boat Races under the flag of the Palm Beach Yacht Club. Mr. Kunsky has ordered his boat shipped down to Miami. Other Detroit theatrical men who are sojourning over the cold months in Miami are Lou Cohen, of Ben and Lou Cohen, Inc., and Phil Kaplan, president of the Theatrical Advertising Co. They will spend six weeks in the South.

When the Kunsky-Balaban and Katz organization announced that Chicago would be the name of the big theatre they will build here, a number of protests against the name were filed. The Detroit chapter of the National Town and Country Club has been asked to protest officially against the name, Chicago, in favor of some other name that will have more of a local application.

A theatre without electric current isn't much good, as many Detroit managers in the East Side district can attest. Something happened to the Detroit-Edison's current one evening a few nights ago and the result was dark houses for more than a dozen managers. The loss mounted into several thousand dollars.

The Eau Claire Theatre Co. has completed a contract with the Eau Claire Book & Stationery Co. for 1,000 opera chairs for the Wisconsin, the new theatre the company will build this spring on its property adjoining the Elks club, Grand Avenue east. The site has been cleared of the buildings which stood on it, preparatory to start of building operations.

The bond issue to defray the cost of the new building has been fully subscribed.

Arkansas

Hugh Wall, owner of the Ozark Theatre at Berryville, Ark., has leased the Majestic Theatre at Green Forest, Ark., and will operate both houses.

The Palace Theatre at Greenwood, Ark., has closed. No other house is there.

Oklahoma

The Empire Theatre at Blackwell, Okla., is being remodelled.

The Petit Theatre at Hominy, Okla., was recently robbed by burglars entering a cabinet safe after the house was closed for the night.

Phyllis Haver is in her 1900 flapper's yachting costume which she wears in First National's "Her Husband's Secret"

St. Louis

Louis Stahl of the Union Theatre, Union and Easton avenue, St. Louis, Mo., had a jubilee celebration on February 15. He had a special matinee at 1 p. m. with the managers of the various St. Louis film exchanges and other prominents as his guests. "Movies" were taken and everything. Stahl has put the Union across big during the few months he has had it in charge.

H. Maxwell opened his Illinois Theatre, Sullivan, Ill., the past week with "The Last of the Duanes" as the feature. He reports excellent business. He closed his house in Hamilton, Ill., and moved the equipment to Sullivan.

Leo Landau of Granite City took in Moberly and Sedalia, Mo., during the week. He wanted to give a musical act the once-over.

'Tis said that when the new St. Louis Theatre, Grand boulevard at Morgan street, opens next June Junior Orpheum vaudeville will be the attraction, and that the Rialto Theatre, Grand just south of Olive street, will become a first-run picture house. The Rialto now is playing vaudeville from the Junior Orpheum circuit.

R. S. Medley has sold the Terry Theatre, Campbell, Mo., to H. L. Fox.

"Broken Laws" will open the new theatre in Jackson, Tenn., being erected by E. L. Drake. This house, which will seat 700, will play none but the best first-run pictures. Drake has a house in Lexington, Tenn.

The Euclid Theatre, Easton and Euclid avenues, St. Louis, operated by Mrs. William Young, has been closed. Mrs. Young will devote her entire time for the present to her Easton-Taylor Theatre.

Tom Reed has fallen for the radio. His wife reports that he has been home more during the past week than for any similar period in their twenty-five years of happy married life. Every moment he can spare from his varied business interests Tom is home, tuning in to hear what's in the air. But he is going to take off long enough to visit New Orleans for the Mardi Gras celebration. He is being accompanied south by Judge Nelson Lehman of Duquoin, Ill.

Leo Keiler has broken ground for his new $500,000 Orpheum Theatre, Paducah, Ky. It will play pictures and vaudeville.

Paragould, Ark., is to have a $60,000 new motion picture house. Bertig Brothers will build it and J. A. Collins is slated for the management.

Advices from St. Joseph, Mo., are that the construction of the Penn Theatre, 26th and Penn avenue, has been postponed indefinitely. E. H. Peskay plans to erect the theatre from plans prepared by E. R. Meier, St. Joseph architect. It will be one story, 50 by 150 feet, and cost upwards of $35,000.

Reed Yemm of the Reed-Yemm-Hayes Circuit attended the convention of the Illinois bill posters held in Peoria, Ill., the past week.

The Dixie Theatre, Vandalia, Mo., has been taken over by Joe Wade of Briggsville. It was formerly owned by William Anderson.

Fortune is unkind to William E. Gray, proprietor of the New Rex Theatre, Pittsburg, Ill. A few weeks ago his child died, and now adverse business conditions have forced him to close his house down to two nights a week. Coal mines in the vicinity of Pittsburg closed because of lack of a market for their output.

Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Rodgers of Cairo, Ill., and Poplar Bluff, Mo., will go to New Orleans via boat for the Mardi Gras celebration.

Visitors of the week included: S. E. Brady, Cape Girardeau, Mo.; H. Maxwell, Sullivan, Ill.; John Marlowe, Herrin, Ill., and Leo Landau, Granite City, Ill.

News of the Illinois Territory

The new theatre at Bushnell, Ill., is going up on East Main street under the management of S. E. Pirtle, who has a chain of houses in the central part of the state. The new house will be called the Rialto and C. M. Albright will be the resident manager. In addition to the new house, the Pirtle circuit has the Cozy Theatre at Bushnell. Both houses will be under the supervision of Mr. Albright.

The new picture theatre at Hinsdale, Ill., will be erected by August Caron of Oak Park, Ill., for the Hinsdale Theatre Company, who are the owners of the new house. Work has started and will be rushed to completion at an early date this summer.

Pickpockets are plying their trade in the aisles of the Loop theatres. David Hersberg had a suspect arrested in the State Lake Theatre last week.

Bob Healy, formerly a well known exhibitor on the South Side, Chicago, is now connected with the Schoenstadt circuit in charge of the Garfield and Halfield theatres.

Manager Julius Lamm of the Douglas Theatre on the South Side, Chicago, is improving the programs of the house and using plenty of printer's ink to get his programs over to the movie fans in that part of the city.

The new State Theatre has opened at Hartford under the management of Joe Kizinski. The house will operate under a picture and vaudeville policy. "The Covered Wagon" was the opening bill.

The name of the Gem Theatre at Herrick, Ill., has been changed to the Palace by Jimmy Frailey, who has taken over the management of the house.

Another new picture theatre is projected for Springfield, Ill., by Frank E. Headley and other business men of the state capital. It is reported that the house will be used for both pictures and vaudeville when completed.

A. J. Meininger has been transferred as manager of the Ascher Merrill Theatre at Milwaukee to the Forest Park Theatre at Forest Park, Ill. He is succeeded at Milwaukee by Bill Seymour, well known manager from Detroit.

Joe Maxwell will open a picture theatre at Sullivan, Ill., in the near future, having closed the Photo Play Theatre at Hamilton, Ill., recently in favor of the new location.

The Strand at Griggsville, Ill., will reopen this month after having closed for repairs for a few weeks. The house is owned by Joe Wade.

Nebraska

The Sun Theatre at Omaha "hooked up" with the general radio craze for a week here as a special feature. Under this plan it arranged to have the artists broadcasting for the WOAW station here every night appear for a short time at the Sun and broadcast some of their selections over the sending station. They made a feature that drew a good attendance. "Dante's Inferno" was being shown the same week to capacity houses.

William Mayberry sold the Goldlight Theatre at Decatur, Neb., to C. L. Donchus.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors who were in Omaha recently calling on the exchanges were: Fred Mehaffey, North Bend, Neb.; Morris Smith, Sioux City, Ia.; Frank Berry, Messena, Ia.; William Hawley, North Platte, Neb.; M. H. Garvin, Holdrege, Neb.; H. F. Kennedy, Broken Bow, Neb.; Mr. and Mrs. A. Burrus, Crete, Neb.; Lee F. Cowger, Coin, Ia.; Mr. and Mrs. William Youngclaus, Jefferson, Ia., and Frank Smith, Carson, Ia.

H. Peterson has sold the Gem at Omaha to H. B. Symes.

M. H. Garvin, whose theatre, the Crescent, at Holdrege, Neb., was destroyed by fire just before it was completed and furnished, was in Omaha recently and indicated that he will rebuild the house. It was a $45,000 building.

G. E. Parks and E. G. Mitchell have bought the Opera House at Gilther, Neb. I. D. Meyer was former owner.

O. E. Shuck has sold his interest in the Opera House at Bloomington, Neb., to Carl Doyen.

E. W. Borne has sold the Opera House at Craig, Neb. A. J. Miller is the new owner.

Max Winthroub has leased the Diamond Theatre in Omaha, which is being completely remodeled. It will be known as the Lake Theatre. It will have vaudeville and pictures combined.

NINA ROMONA

Who looms as a potential screen star. She made her first appearance at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in "Cheaper to Marry."

San Francisco's Police Chief's Son Is Star of New Picture

The Western premiere showing of "The Dancers," George O'Brien's first big picture, opened in a wonderful manner despite heavy rains which affected theatre attendance generally. Thanks to Nat Holt, manager of the California Theatre, and Director of Publicity Charles E. Kurtzman, this star is already one of the best known in this city. His illustrious father, Chief of Police Daniel J. O'Brien, watched the advance publicity campaign with much interest, but kept a "hands off" policy so that the success of San Francisco's new star might be credited fully to his work and to the regular methods of publicity. Most of the newspaper critics spoke very highly of the production and of the work of the local boy.

Harry David, for many years associated with the Portola and California theatres, San Francisco, in the capacity of manager, and for the past four years with Mack Sennett at Los Angeles as manager of this film man's theatre interests, has returned to his old home town and rejoined the Rothchild Entertainment, Inc., having been made house manager of the Granada Theatre.

Max Graf's new Egyptian Theatre on Market street, opposite McAllister, will be ready for occupancy in March. This theatre will be operated in conjunction with one a block further up the street and it is the plan to offer first-run productions simultaneously. While of small size, the theatre will be fitted with all modern conveniences and will be beautiful in their decoration.

The management of West Coast Theatres, Inc., has arranged with station KPO for the broadcasting of organ and orchestral music, as well as professional theatrical entertainment. Workmen are installing microphones, amplifiers and controls, and broadcasting will be commenced at an early date.

A. L. Gore, president of West Coast Theatres, Inc., is in San Francisco for an extended stay and is giving his personal attention to the plans for building a number of theatres in the residence districts.

Joe Bauer, who recentlly disposed of his interests in the Wigwam Theatre, San Francisco, will leave on an extended trip to Europe late in February.

A number of changes are scheduled for downtown theatres at an early date. Will King, who has held forth at the Strand for several months, is to make way for vaudeville and pictures, Beattie's Casino is to offer stock company attractions and the Hippodrome, long the home of vaudeville, is to become a straight picture house, featuring Warner Bros. productions.

Walter Barusch, formerly director of publicity for the California Theatre, San Francisco, has been made general manager of publicity for the Pacific States Theatres, Inc., which is opening a chain of houses. This circuit recently opened the Palace at San Leandro and the Franklin at Oakland.

Eugene L. Perry, manager of the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, assumed charge of this house just in time to select the ushers for the re-opening and has gathered a modern edition of the famous Florodora Sextette.

Under the direction of Manager Frank C. Burhans a matinee plan for kiddies has been inaugurated at the U. C. Theatre, Berkeley. The special performances are held Saturday mornings from 10 o'clock to noon and include historical and other educational subjects, dancing by children performers, community singing and story telling.

The many friends of P. J. Healon of the Virginia Theatre, Vallejo, Cal., and one of the best known and most popular exhibitors in California, are greatly concerned over his serious illness. He has been taken to a hospital for treatment and his condition is such that visitors are denied him.

A picture theatre will be built on the Alameda, San Jose, Cal., by Barnett & Phelps.

A. C. Karski and Louis Kaliski, who plan to erect a picture house at Grand, Lakeside and Walker avenues, Oakland, Cal., have purchased an adjoining lot and plans for the theatre are being revised.

Work has been commenced on the construction of a picture theatre at Hayward, Cal., to be operated by Pacific States Theatres, Inc.

The Monterey Theatres Company, Monterey, Cal., has been granted a permit to remodel and made additions to its theatre at 608 Lighthouse avenue.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., will build a new theatre seating 1,500 at Huntington Park, a suburb of Los Angeles. The new theatre will be located on the east side of South Pacific boulevard adjoining the new Boulevard Hotel. The building will be of old Mission style with a large wide foyer. More than $250,000 will be expended on the building.

The new Egyptian Theatre at Maywood, a suburb of Los Angeles, will be completed in March, according to the announcement of the Mann-Walker Company. It will seat 1,500 and will be leased for a term of ten years.

Ed Garfield, manager of the Garfield Egyptian at Alhambra, gave a free admission ticket to every newsboy in San Gabriel, Alhambra and Monterey recently. The free show to the "newsies" was continuous, including the matinee and evening performance. The youngsters were given all the best seats.

PAULETTE DUVAL
to have prominence in "Cheaper to Marry" which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production she graces after a part in "He Who Gets Slapped"

What Was Your Big Thrill, Mr. Showman?

A number of interesting exhibitor experiences will be related from time to time in this department, the first next week.

One exhibitor recalls the time when one picture saved him from bankruptcy, another when a kleptomaniac returned a stolen purse.

Haven't you a story for us?

News of the Kansas Territory

He does not forget faces—nor hands—T. J. Wilson, who operates the Bancroft and St John theatres, suburban houses of Kansas City, told an assistant county prosecutor Saturday. Mr. Wilson said that on the morning of January 19 two men accosted him as he left his apartment and forced him into a motor car, robbing him of $371 in cash, a diamond stickpin valued at $125 and a watch valued at $25. On Wednesday Mr. Wilson said he got into a taxicab and recognized the driver as one of the bandits who had robbed him. He knew his face and hands, he said, because he had observed them closely during the robbery. A first degree robbery charge was filed against the driver on the strength of Mr. Wilson's testimony.

A "ballyhoo" artist, who is said to have "ballyhoed" good citizens of Manhattan, Kas., out of some hard earned money, including a worthless check for $42, is being sought by Kansas exhibitors. The man, a tall, slender fellow wearing glasses, a soft felt hat and brown suit, represented himself to Jack Gross of the Wareham Theatre as a ballyhoo artist, acrobat and what not. Then he proceeded to "collect."

The following openings, closings and changes of management of theatres in the Kansas City territory have been announced: Olympic Theatre, Clarksville, Mo., closed temporarily on account of lack of light and power, due to a blizzard; negotiations for the acquisition of the Zim Theatre and Opera House of Winfield, Kas., by the Miller interests of Wichita, Kas., are pending; O. K. Mason of Newton, Kas., also interested in the deal; the Mayflower Theatre, Florence, Kas., has closed temporarily; the Strand and Benton theatres, suburban houses of Kansas City, will enlarge their seating capacities, the Strand from 750 to 1,250 and the Benton from 825 to 1,125, according to J. W. Watson, manager.

The Victory Theatre, 105-7 East Twelfth street, Kansas City, one of the early landmarks of what now is the city's "theatre row," is to be razed to make way for a business building.

Walter Finney, manager of the Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, developed a new idea, as far as Kansas City publicity records go, the other day and the result was a three-column "spread" in the Kansas City Journal-Post. Mr. Finney "sold" the city editor the idea that a character sketch, showing all the duties of the various employes of the theatre, a first-run and vaudeville house, along with a feature story, would go over good as a Sunday story. And it did.

Equalling the brilliance of a first night of a new theatre was the formal presentation of the new stage at the American Theatre, Bellingham, Wash., by Fred Walton of the Bellingham Theatres Co. The house was packed to capacity and crowds were turned away. When the asbestos curtain went up, revealing the gorgeous scenic curtain of henna, with its black and polychrome trim, the house rang with applause. A similar outburst greeted every new set. This company has the largest stage in the state, complete new lighting system, scenery and drapes. The cost was over $12,000. A full new floor was laid on the stage, of white maple, and new dressing rooms in large number have been equipped with all modern conveniences. A splendid symphony orchestra of twenty-five members was seated on the stage for the opening, and a clever page, with a green satin uniform and a huge book, made a stunning announcer. B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle handled complete contracts for the work for the Bellingham Theatres Company. "Captain Blood" was Mr. Walton's opening attraction.

Through a most discouraging downpour, which would ordinarily kill week end business, the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, stood a double line over a block long out on Sunday on "The Thief of Baglad." On the opening morning the lineup reached over a block and a half by 10:30 a. m. The run will be an extended one.

A change has just occurred in Anacortes, Wash., which brings up for discussion several interesting possibilities. It seems that Frank Wade, who leased the Victory Theatre, neglected to make immediate renewal when his lease expired on January 31. B. B. Vivian, owner of the Empire, who at one time leased the Victory himself, stepped in and signed a lease on the house. All the equipment, chairs, lights, etc., belonged to Wade, who has removed them, making it seem an "empty victory" for Vivian. Now they are announcing that friends of Wade's will build him a new house in the downtown district, in direct competition to Vivian. It is not known whether B. B. will re-equip and operate the Victory. He could not be reached for a statement.

W. F. Kienitz, owner of the Kootenai Theatre, Libby, Mont., is going in for a spring renovating and refurnishing. He will have new carpets, drapes, decorations, lighting fixtures and loge chairs. His house seats 450. All of the work will be done while the house is running, by B. F. Shearer, Inc.

McDaniel & Anderson of the Liberty, Kalispel, Mont., one of the largest houses in the state, are installing a new blue silk plush stage curtain, and completely redraping the house.

Among the speakers of the opening day's program for the thirteenth annual Newspaper Institute, held at the University of Washington, at Seattle, last week, was Robert Bender, manager of the Columbia Theatre, a U. of W. Alumnus.

Jack Howard has resigned the management of the Neptune Theatre, Jensen & Von Herberg's suburban house in Seattle, and left for New York where he expects to remain permanently. He has been succeeded at the Neptune by Mr. Gwinn, formerly of Olympia.

R. E. Neal, of the Casino and Class A theatres, Spokane, was in Seattle this week adjusting his bookings after severing his business relations with J. W. Allender. Mr. Neal states that he contemplates no immediate change in policy. He has taken his brother, T. H. Neal, into business with him.

Jack Allender, who now has the Ritz, Majestic and Lyric, was in on a similar mission. While not interviewed directly, he is reported to have stated that he will put his houses on a second-run basis, and to that effect made a number of second-run feature bookings while here.

Associated Exhibitors

(Includes Selznick)

BROADWAY BROKE. Star, Mary Carr. A very good one; as usual Mary does her stuff well; a little slow at start but finishes up fine; some fine scenery in this. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20, 10-25. J. E. Hubbell, Palace Theatre (350 seats), Worthington, Indiana.

COMMON LAW. Star, Corinne Griffith. A very good production; pretty deep for most people, but has some very fine acting by this wonderful cast; should have been condensed to seven reels, however. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Medium audience appeal. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20, 10-25. J. E. Hubbell, Palace Theatre (350 seats), Worthington, Indiana.

DAUGHTERS OF TODAY. (7 reels). Star cast. The best picture that has hit Morgantown in years. A college picture true to life. Tone. good. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, city of 16,000. Admission 15-30. Herbert A. Shaw, Metropolitan Theatre (1,300 seats), Morgantown, West Virginia.

DEFYING DESTINY. Star, Monty Blue. This is a very good program picture; pleased nearly all, some said fine. Tone. good. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20, 10-25. J. E. Hubbell, Palace Theatre (350 seats), Worthington, Indiana.

WOMAN TO WOMAN. (6,994 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A very good picture. Betty does some mighty fine acting, and Betty is good to look at. Pleased ninety per cent. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20, 10-25. J. E. Hubbell, Palace Theatre (350 seats), Worthington, Indiana.

F. B. O.

AIR HAWK. (5 reels). Star, Al Wilson. As a thriller cannot be beat. Pleased a Saturday crowd and had them breathless. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Splendid attendance. College class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

AMERICAN MANNERS. (5,200 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. This is a real comedy, and full of pep, lots of stunts, and pleased everyone. We need more of this kind for our sick box office. Talmadge is a sure comer and when we have him again, all the kids will be back and most of the old ones. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Excellent audience appeal. All classes town of 2,000. Admission 10-20, 10-25. J. E. Hubbell, Palace Theatre (350 seats), Worthington, Indiana.

DESERT DRIVEN. (5,840 feet). Star, Harry Carey. A good picture of its type but Harry Carey is getting too old for westerns. The fans want young heroes like Fred Thomson, Bob Custer, etc., and you can't satisfy them with the old timers any more. This was an excellent picture though and pleased the majority, although none raved over it. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LIGHTS OUT. (6,938 feet). Star cast. This is a very good mystery picture with plenty of action and thrills; not a specialty but will go with any audience as good entertainment. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

MASK OF LOPEZ. (4,900 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A better than average western, which pulled in a little better than average crowd on an extremely bad night. Fred seems to be getting "camera broke." His expression is improved. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. Rural class, town of 300. Admission 10-30. 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

NO GUN MAN. Star, Lefty Flynn. A fair picture; his valet brings out a few laughs. Quite a bit of shoot 'em up in it. Tone, fair. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Robert Hines, Hines' Theatre, Loyalton, South Dakota.

SILENT STRANGER. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. A little better than the most of his, which is saying plenty, as they are the most consistently good westerns we ever ran. Did extra good business. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers and town people, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star, G. A. Billings. A pictorial history of the life of Abe Lincoln from cradle to grave, including love, marriage, political trials, and war of rebellion. Excellent cast. Historical value alone will draw if put over right. Tone, excellent. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks. Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

BAD MAN. (6,404 feet). Star, Holbrook Blinn. Here's one that is a dandy. Story laid in Mexico, well acted, well directed, and a good story. What more can you ask? Tone, none. Sunday, doubtful. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

BRAWN OF THE NORTH. (7,650 feet). Star, Strongheart (dog). A real picture, one that will please. Also a clean picture of the north woods with beautiful scenery. Had lots of comps on this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Town and country class, town of 650. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Another excellent story for Dick and he did it nicely as did the entire cast. While weather did not permit a large attendance, all were pleased that came. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Old, but bought right. More favorable comments than on usual run of pictures. It tickles the men and creates a lot of talk. Made a little money and am satisfied. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

FLAMING YOUTH. (8,474 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Pulled extra business. It seems to be a good bet for any size town. Bought it right. Made a little money in bad weather. Appeals to younger set. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

GIRL IN THE LIMOUSINE. (5,630 feet). Star, Larry Semon. Not up to expectations. Comedy situation is forced. Lots of slapstick which pleased the kids immensely. Good program picture and will get by. The ladies panned it. Frank H. Watton, Park Theatre, Lebanon, New Hampshire.

HER TEMPORARY HUSBAND. (6,722 feet). Star cast. Here was a picture I did not mortgage the theatre on the purchase price and which I put on with no great spread of printer's ink or other exploitation, but how those who attended did laugh. People for days afterwards asked me why I had not let them know I was to have such a splendid picture. It helped my business for a week. People like to be made to laugh, and this one will accomplish that end. Tone, good.

Sunday, yes. Special, no. Excellent audience appeal. Small town and rural class, town of 2,245. Admission 10-25. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (299 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

HOTTENTOT. (5,053 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. This is a dandy comedy drama that will please most any audience. In seven reels. The race is fine. Plot of play is good. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Town and country class, town of 650. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

HUSBANDS AND LOVERS. (7,882 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. An excellent domestic drama and supporting cast. Everything to be expected in a sex picture. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

IN EVERY WOMAN'S LIFE. (4,258 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. Good program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. College class town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (1,100 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

MADONNA OF THE STREETS. (7,507 feet). Star, Nazimova. A good picture of its kind and it seemed to please. Very few comments, however. Sills always a favorite. Though Nazimova's work is good her name has no attraction for my people. Used as a program attraction. Tone, all right. Possible for Sunday showing. Fair attendance. College class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

PERFECT FLAPPER. (7,000 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Splendid. Don't overlook this bet if you have not already played it. Nothing big but a picture that will absolutely get good business and satisfy. Tone, all right. Sunday, possible. Good attendance. College class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

SO BIG. (8,562 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Colleen Moore in something you would never dream of her playing. This is Edna Ferber's novel brought to the screen by Miss Moore in such a convincing manner that it actually delights the public. This truly has been the "acid test" for this versatile star and she certainly has stood it. Recommend all exhibitors to secure it immediately. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Excellent audience appeal. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

TWENTY-ONE. (6,560 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. An excellent production with wonderful acting on part of Dick and Dot Mackaill who almost carried away the honors. Cold snap held attendance low and no bell at the box office was rung. Can't blame the picture though, as all who saw it were well satisfied. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

In response to friend Prescott's query regarding hold-over playing to get word-of-mouth advertising, that other good scout, L. O. Davis—you know he's running three theatres down in the vicinity of Hazard, Kentucky—comes in with a chat that's so corking good that I had to turn it over to my editorial chief, Bob Welsh.

That means I won't run it here; you will find it up in the front of the World—if not this week, then soon.

In the meantime, get the very sincere and worth-while talk on serials which a new friend, L. J. Dowling, of the Lyric Theatre, Syracuse, New York, has contributed for the betterment of serials and serial conditions.

Remember, boys—report early and often!—and come in whenever you have time, with some ideas that are worth the attention of the rest of "Our Gang."

VAN

Fox

AGAINST ALL ODDS. (4,850 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Great stuff. Keep Jones in westerns like this and he'll be okay. Tone, fair. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes, city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats). Birmingham, Alabama.

LADIES TO BOARD. (6,112 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Different from most of Tom's pictures as far as type of story is concerned, and our patrons liked it very much. Poor attendance. Very cold. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,900 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Mix and Grey is the best combination I ever played. Did well on it, but had to suffer on some of the other pictures I booked with it. General audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

TROUBLE SHOOTER. (5,702 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A fast action Mix picture. More action than Mix has been putting into his pictures. Will he liked by everyone. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Factory class. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

TROUBLE SHOOTER. (5,702 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A good Mix picture. Story differs some from the usual western and our patrons liked it. A real good small town picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats). Vermont, Illinois.

Metro-Goldwyn

CHU CHIN CHOW. Star, Betty Blythe. Fairly good program picture. Foreign pictures don't take so good here. But we didn't do bad on this one. Not good enough for special. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Appeals to better class. All classes, town of 4,500. Admission 10-30. J. Angros, Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

DESIRE. (6,500 feet). Star cast. FORGET-ME-NOT. Star, Gareth Hughes. Print rotten, so exchange sent us "Forget Me Not," with Gareth Hughes and Bessie Love. A real good picture except that you have to use your imagination too much. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Factory class. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

HIS HOUR. (6,300 feet). Star cast. Great story, well played. A surprising picture. Very interesting. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, city of 16,000. Admission 15-30. Herbert A. Shaw, Metropolitan Theatre (1,300 seats), Morgantown, West Virginia.

MARRIED FLIRTS. (6,705 feet). Star, Pauline Frederick. Good picture. Very interesting. Good story and acting fine. One of her best pictures. Tone, good. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Mixed class, city of 16,000. Admission 15-30. Herbert A. Shaw, Metropolitan Theatre (1,300 seats), Morgantown, West Virginia.

NAVIGATOR. (5,558 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Positively the best Keaton comedy produced. A scream from start to finish. Anyway, every exhibitor will book it in time, so nuf sed. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

SHOOTING OF DAN McGREW. (6,318 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Here is a real picture. Title does not seem to draw, but boost it. It will please better than most of the real specials. Tone, good. Sunday, hardly. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers and town people, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

SNOB. (6,513 feet). Star cast. Good program picture with a good cast. Not strong enough for special. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Appeals to all classes. All classes, town of 4,500. Admission 10-30. J. Angros, Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

THREE AGES. (5,500 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. It's so seldom that I get a bad one from Metro-Goldwyn that I don't like to criticize any of them, but this one is far from good. Will make a little program picture if you have a good fill in. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

YOLANDA. (10,125 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A truly super production of romance concerning court ladies and knights of old sword play, horsemanship, combats, rescues and everything to make one of the best costume pictures I have ever shown. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one

Serial Suggestions from Syracuse

Mr. Leo J. Dowling, manager of the Lyric Theatre (235 seats), Syracuse, New York, sends in a letter containing such good, common sense information and comments that it is published in full. Here it is:

"May I say a word or two concerning good and bad serials and practices?

"At present I am running three a week—two Universals, 'Riddle Rider' and 'Iron Man' and Pathe's 'Galloping Hoofs' (just starting).

"I believe I am in a good position to view serials.

"Good, short serials are the life of any small neighborhood theatre. Pathe and Universal lead the field by a long shot in the way of serials.

"Of course, said two exchanges have made their good and bad serials in the past year. Universal's fault seems to be that their serials are too long; impossible to hold patronage for fifteen weeks. Another apparent flaw, very noticeable in 'Wolves of the North,' is the padding out method of repeating two hundred feet of the preceding episode each time—many complaints received about it.

"But I shall truthfully say that Universal has turned out some good serials in the past year, such as 'The Fast Express,' 'Iron Man,' and 'Riddle Rider.'

"They also supply, gratis, a 250-foot trailer in advance on all their serials, which gives a serial a big send-off. That's the thing that counts most on serials—that's the reason I play a hundred per cent. on Universal's serials.

hundred per cent. Special, yes. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Paramount

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. Zane Grey story. This is a good special, and a dandy box office picture. Well produced and directed. An audience would have to be hard to suit that didn't like this one. Has everything. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Watton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star cast. Unusual drawing power. Brought those in that other pictures leave out. Best of attendance. Zane Grey is due the credit. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. College class, town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Jr., Lyric Theatre (1,100 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. Just a program picture. Not very good stuff for small towns. No good for special. Tone, not very good. Sunday, no. Not much audience appeal. All classes, town of 4,500. Admission 10-30. J. Angros, Palace Theatre (400 seats). Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. (6,799 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. This is a well directed comedy drama that is spoiled by the last hundred feet where it appears that the men trade women. It didn't appeal to my family and I am afraid it didn't set well with a lot. To the average motion picture director the marriage relation seems to be the most temporary, unimportant thing in modern life. It isn't, and my crowd doesn't like to see it so portrayed. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

CODE OF THE SEA. Star, Rod LaRoque. Can't say very much for this picture. Too slow and too many night scenes; it gets on your nerve waiting for something to happen. Then when the action comes it's too dark; you can't tell what is happening. Tone, yes. Sunday, no. Special, no. Weak audience appeal. All classes, town of 2,000. Admission 10-20, 10-25. J. E. Hubbell, Palace Theatre (350 seats), Worthington, Indiana.

CONFIDENCE MAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A fairly good Meighan picture that would have been very satisfactory entertainment had it not been that the ending was gone and the story was incomplete. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audence appeal, fair. Small town and rural class, town of 2,245. Admission 10-25. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (299 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star cast. A complete knockout at the box office. Well, it just had to be or we would have lost our sox. Smashed all records. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

COVERED WAGON. (9,407 feet). Star cast. Lost a little money on a three days' run due to bad weather and roads. Will play it again. Comes nearer pleasing one hundred per cent than any picture I ever played. Players all live their parts. Tone, fine. Special, yes. General audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Something different from the usual run of Negri pictures. While this is not the picture that "Forbidden Paradise" is, it will please the highbrows. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, fair. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

FAIR WEEK. (5 reels). Star, Walter Heirs. Nothing big, but clean all the way through. I have seen adverse reports on this production from other exhibitors, but I can honestly report that my patrons liked it and told me so as they left the theatre. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Small town and rural class, town of 2,245. Admission 10-25. W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre (299 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star, Rod LaRoque. A picture out of the ordinary, especially the after death scenes. Personally am in doubt concerning its merits, as some praised it highly while others did not seem to like it. But nevertheless it is a big picture and worth seeing even if disappointing to some. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Special, doubtful. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star cast. The best picture in many a moon. Nothing but favorable comments from patrons of all classes. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. General audience appeal. Rural class, town of 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Star cast. A fair program picture, good for two days. The picture falls down in the climax; it is not strong enough. They just didn't get it over. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audence appeal, seventy-five per cent. Factory class. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. This is one of her best pictures but she doesn't mean anything to my box office. "Lily of the Dust" hurt her with a lot of my better patrons. The best thing I know about the new forty is that it has but one Negri picture in it. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. The best thing I played with Pola Negri. My patrons instead of objecting to costume pictures seem to still enjoy them, especially when mounted in the style of this picture. Tone, all right. Sunday, no. Good attendance. College class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN. (8,300 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Quite an interesting picture of the jazz type, which follows the book closely. However, my patrons walked out with about the expressions they would have at leaving the deathbed of a close friend. The ending was gone from the picture and the last scene was an old man falling down stairs. If you get a print with the ending, the motto is shown on the wall which helps to counteract the effect of the death scene. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Small town and rural class, town of 2,245. Admission 10-25. W. J.

Powell, Lonet Theatre (299 seats), Wellington, Ohio.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star cast. This has been classed as one of 1924's best pictures and I believe it should stand in that class. It was very well liked. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 900. Admission 10-25-30. Charles L. Nott, Opera House (400 seats), Sutherland, Iowa.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good crook picture. Has most everything that the picture fan wants and should go most any place. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. "Manhandled," like all of Gloria Swanson's pictures, is way above the average in the way of entertainment. Gloria is a saleslady in a department store and Tom Moore as Jimmie Hogan the auto mechanic will appeal to the masses as real stuff. If you haven't shown this one yet you've got something rich to give your patrons. City and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Just a program picture and pleased all who saw it. No drawing power. I expected too much of it and was disappointed. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Average audience appeal. College class, town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Jr., Lyric Theatre (1,100 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

NEXT CORNER. (7,081 feet). Star, Dorothy MacKaill. Well, it was fearfully cold and the radio must have been good, as we had no crowd at all to see this one, and we were glad, as it is a very poor show. Lay off. Tone, fair. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,867 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Not much of a picture. Looks like Paramount is trying to kill some stars. A few more like it and Viola Dana will be through. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. No audience appeal. College class, town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre (1,100 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Exploited to the skies. Best production for general satisfaction I ever ran in my twenty-four years in the business. Cast as a whole, good. I had every preacher in the city pulling for me. Record business. Tone, best ever. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Joe K., Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. It's Valentino, and as such drew a good crowd and, I presume, pleased them. Without Rudolph the picture would be decidedly poor; however, in justice to producer and players, must admit my people came to see it and after paying advanced admission did not kick. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Good attendance. College class, town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 10-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (400 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. A fair western with no outstanding features. Does not rank high, but will pass with a good comedy. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Limited audience appeal. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

SPANISH DANCER. (8,434 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Paramount spent a lot of money on this one and it pleases highly where audiences are well read on foreign customs and history, but in farming communities where patrons like action in its wild state, without straining the mind, it falls flat. At least, it was received with silence (and plenty of it) here. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Limited audience appeal. Rural class, town of 300. Admission 10-30, 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (7,912 feet). Star cast. This is a good picture. Has an interesting plot and enough of the American flag to get the audience friendly and applauding. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Serial Suggestions

"In regard to Pathe, their 'Into the Net' was a world beater as a money maker for any exhibitor who played it; but it was a shame to give such a good serial a black eye by following it with 'Ten Scars Make a Man.'

"The latter serial I sent off to a good start by playing with a super-special feature; but from then on it dropped back each week. Not one patron ever had a word of praise for it; it was the poorest serial from every standpoint that I had run.

"It starred Allene Ray. And now they follow hot-foot in with 'Galloping Hoofs,' also starring Allene Ray. They'll surely kill her; patrons can get too much of any one star.

"A word concerning Pathe trailers on serials. I believe, in fact I know, they have stopped selling or renting their serial trailers for a dollar. On 'Galloping Hoofs' I tried Albany and Buffalo exchanges for trailers and on latter serial they informed me they were making no more trailers.

"To Pathe may I say, that's a step in the wrong direction! May I depose that loss of trailer on that serial (first time ever!) sent this good serial off to the poorest start a serial ever made in my house.

"Nothing can take the place of a good 250-foot trailer: Pathe, give us back your serial trailer service.

"As a parting warning—if a serial is going to succeed or make money, for the producer, and the exhibitor, and give real entertainment to the movie patrons—first, give us stories that are true to life, logical—second, TEN chapters is long enough—third, give us more action and less padding.

"Last, but not least—stop forever the fifteen chapter serials, before it is too late!"

TOMORROW'S LOVE. (5,903 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Nice little program picture. Domestic drama, well received by the audience. High class in every respect. Not very exciting, but you won't hear any kicks. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Watton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

TO THE LADIES. (6,268 feet). Star, Theodore Roberts. A good little comedy drama that will please most of your audience. Not a special. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Town and country class, town of 900. Admission 10-25-30. Charles L. Nott, Opera House (400 seats), Sutherland, Iowa.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Good attendance and pleased all. A picture that will please any audience. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. College class, town of 2,100. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Jr., Lyric Theatre (1,100 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This is a well directed, beautiful picture. The color photography makes it a novelty but I had more people speak adversely of same than praise it. It makes a darker picture and therefore harder on the eyes and more trying on them. May be suitable for Sunday. Special, yes. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Pathe

BATTLING ORIOLES. (5 reels). Star cast. A very entertaining five reel comedy, but I do not believe it is big enough to stand up alone. I tried it as the feature of a program and people seemed to think they hadn't received their money's worth though they liked the comedy. Tone, good. Sunday, possible. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

DYNAMITE SMITH. (5 reels). Star, Charles Ray. Not so good. Dramatically this is fine but as an entertainment it is weak and does not draw nor please if I can judge an audience. Tone, fine. Sunday, perhaps. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Scene from "Her Daily Dozen," a two-reel Century Comedy

GIRL SHY. (7,457 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. This picture gave the best of satisfaction. Ought to please anywhere. However, the price is too high. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Town and country class, town of 900. Admission 10-25-30. Charles L. Nott, Opera House (400 seats), Sutherland, Iowa.

GIRL SHY. Star, Harold Lloyd. While this is by far the best Harold has ever done, yet small towns have to give about ninety per cent of what you get in for them, so Pathe gets the money. You get only the satisfaction of giving your patrons a program which always pleases them. Farmers and town people, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

HOT WATER. (5,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Some picture, but not his best. All it needs is let the people know you have it, the picture does the rest. Tone, good. Special, yes. Fine audience appeal. Mixed class, city of 16,000. Admission 15-30. Herbert A. Shaw, Metropolitan Theatre (1,300 seats), Morgantown, West Virginia.

KING OF WILD HORSES. (5 reels). Star, Rex (horse). A mighty good novelty but has a few bad fake scenes the audience caught. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes, city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

SAFETY LAST. (6,400 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A good comedy that will please and go over big; in fact, all Lloyd's will please. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Town and country class, town of 650. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE. (5 reels). Star cast. Very good Sunday picture. Fine cast. Excellent story. Suitable for any house. Harry A. Needle, Lyric Theatre, 23rd Street, New York City.

ANOTHER SCANDAL. (8 reels). Star cast. Exceptionally good. Big business with weather very much against us. John Fischer, Royal Theatre, Atlantic City, New Jersey.

CHALK MARKS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. This is an exceptionally fine picture. It pleased everybody and drew well, with plenty of opposition. John Fisher, Royal Theatre, Atlantic City, New Jersey.

CHORUS LADY. Star cast. An excellent comedy drama. Should please the majority. Good for a Sunday. Harry A. Needle, Lyric Theatre, New York City.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star cast. Very good picture and pleased all classes. Played to capacity. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star, Harry Carey. As usual Harry Carey gives us another excellent western that is good enough for any house. Carey's pictures can always be depended upon for big stories and the absolute absence of the absurdities usually found in westerns. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent for masses. Rural classes, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

HER OWN FREE WILL. (6 reels). Star cast. My patrons were all satisfied. Received many complimentary remarks. Drew big. F. W. Sauter, Seaside Theatre, Somers Point, New Jersey.

HOOSIER SCHOOL MASTER. (5,326 feet). Star cast. Good picture, ruined by a dark print. W. E. Stepp, Regent Theatre, Pleasanton, Kansas.

HOOSIER SCHOOL MASTER. (5,326 feet). Star, Jane Thomas. This picture did not please. Audience does not like rough pictures of this type. Picture, however, is true to period and environment. Plenty of action, but not for a high class audience. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, forty per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission, 10-20-30. Frank H. Watton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

HOUSE OF YOUTH. (6,650 feet). Star cast. Pictures like these please the patrons and fill the seats. I give this picture my unqualified recommendation. Sam Frank, Palace Theatre, Hammonton, New Jersey.

ROARING RAILS. (5,753 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Some picture. Fast moving and sustained action and lots of human interest. Everybody liked it. Wonderful Saturday picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Watton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

WELCOME STRANGER. (6,618 feet). Star cast. Good audience picture. Got many laughs. Florence Vidor well liked by patrons. R. D. Wilkins, Rialto Theatre, Woodbury, New Jersey.

WELCOME STRANGER. (6,618 feet). Star cast. Very good. Held up fairly well despite bad weather. Pleased all. Harry Needle, Lyric Theatre, 23rd Street, New York City.

United Artists

GARRISON'S FINISH. (8 reels). Star, Jack Pickford. Consider this a fair program picture. Notice one exhibitor says it's a knockout, but I can't see it. Entertaining in spots but drawn out too long. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

THREE MUSKETEERS. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Am not knocking the picture, but it was too long and not the kind for my town. We small towns get better results from western pictures of five and six reel lengths. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

WOMAN OF PARIS. Star, Edna Purviance. This is something new in movie technique. Here is a picture that appeals to your intelligence; no melodramatics or heroics, just realism and simplicity itself, and the director puts it over without trickery or impossible stunts. Edna Purviance is great and Adolph Menjou is greater, the best this artist has ever done. Charlie Chaplin has given us a masterpiece. Get it before it is too late. City and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

Universal

DRIFTING. (7,394 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A very good program picture that will hold attention of crowd. Quite a bit of action. Town and country class, town of 650. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

DRIVEN. (5,400 feet). Star cast. Rather a gruesome but powerful dramatic story of southern mountains. Some good characters never barks up the wrong tree in any of his Warner Bros. feature parts and acting. From a box office angle this was a near flop. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

EAGLE'S TALONS. Star, Fred Thomson. Good action, but isn't pulling them. People are not falling for this serial hokum like they used to, and I don't blame them. Give us something new and they'll come. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-25. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Browning, Missouri.

FAMILY SECRET. (5,076 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. A very amusing comedy drama. Light and void of any noticeable excitement, but will please the majority. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

FIGHTING AMERICAN. (5,251 feet). Star, Pat O'Malley. Full of pep and ginger. From America to China with lots of crazy stunts. Raymond Hatton furnishes the comedy. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

FIGHTING FURY. (4,491 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Something decidedly different from Hoxie's usual pictures. Hoxie in the role of a Spanish "Don" who wreaks vengeance on the three cross ranch gang who destroyed his family. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

LAW FORBIDS. (6,262 feet). Star, Baby Peggy. Here is about as fine a picture as we ever played, so the most of the patrons said as they passed out. A dandy entertainment. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princes Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

MERRY-GO-ROUND. (9,175 feet). Star cast. A picture that has a good plot and is interesting from start to finish although it is too long. Town and country class, town of 650. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

MERRY-GO-ROUND. (9,175 feet). Star cast. A fine picture that did not pull the business it should. Advertised heavily, but could not get them in. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Rockliffe Fellows. Another big special railroad drama with box office value, but do not show too close to the "Midnight Express," as the similarity of the scenes and names are very noticeable. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Special, yes. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

STOLEN SECRETS. (4,742 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson A dandy little program picture. Good cast, good photography and good entertainment for the masses. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Masses, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

TORNADO. (6,576 feet). Star, House Peters. Another melodrama by Lincoln Carter brought to the screen. The scenes of the tornado appear to be very realistic. Good picture to book. Tone okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

WESTERN WALLOP. (4,611 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Story of a convict on parole. Rather exciting and contains a few wallops that should please western fans. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy per cent. Mixed class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

WHITE TIGER. (7,177 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. I consider this a real crook story. Priscilla Dean, Ray Griffith and Wallace Beery sure put this over. Ray Griffith in my estimation is one of the best bets on the screen. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Fine audience appeal. Family class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

WHITE TIGER. (7,177 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A good program picture. A crook story that will get by. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Town and country class, town of 650.

LOUISE FAZENDA

As she appears in a scene in the Metro-Goldwyn's "Cheaper to Marry."

Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

Vitagraph

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (6 reels). Star, John Bowers. This one is a real Saturday picture that will come as close to pleasing as anything you can show. A high class western. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (6 reels). Star, John Bowers. Very good western picture but absolutely no wilderness. It's a pity names of pictures are so misleading. Just some more trouble for exhibitors. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, fair. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. W. G. Enloe, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (6 reels). Star cast. Very good picture, but nothing pertaining to wilderness. Wonder where they got the title. Tone, fair. Audience appeal, eighty-five per cent. Middle and working class city of 25,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

GIRL IN HIS ROOM. Star, Alice Calhoun. An old re-issue which came to us in good shape and pleased most of them. We bought these pictures right and with one exception "Secret of the Hills," have been satisfied. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Farmers and town people, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins and Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

GIRL'S DESIRE. Star, Alice Calhoun. An old comedy drama which we received a new print on and pleased most of them. Just a little better than ordinary program pictures. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. Farmers and town people town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

NO DEFENSE. Star, William Duncan. Another of the old reissues with a pair of stars which for small town places are always good this picture has lots of action. Good story and drama. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers and town people, town of 800. Admission 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

Warner Bros.

CORNERED. (7,500 feet). Star, Marie Prevost. Fine crook picture; wonderful double exposure work; considerable straining of credulity but audience seemed to entirely Praise!

"My dear Van and 'Gang';—I wish to thank you for the wonderful tips I have received from Straight From the Shoulder.

"They help us to select our pictures and advertise them so well.

"Also—the press sheet editions are a great help in many ways.

"I should have contributed more to your department but I am just running two pictures a week and part of these are old ones.

"Hoping you will keep the good work going, I am, yours truly, Lee Dillingham, Kozy Theatre, Nortonville, Kentucky."

overlook this. Hatton, Fellows and Fitzgerald all excellent. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Masses, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

COUNTRY KID. (6,300 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. Excellent, probably Barry's greatest picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Excellent for masses. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

DADDIES. (6,800 feet). Star cast. A wow, a humdinger, a knockout or anything you would call a picture that knocks 'em cookoo. If only they had left the "drama" out it would be one hundred per cent plus. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Masses town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

DADDIES. (6,800 feet). Star, Mae Marsh. An excellent program show that was thoroughly enjoyed by young and old. It is good entertainment. Print in excellent shape. Tone, good. Not suitable for special. Great audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

GOLD DIGGERS. (6,500 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. Good production. A good story, splendid cast. Don't be afraid of this; it will stand up. Okay for special. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Should appeal to all classes. All classes, town of 4,500. Admission 10-30. J. Angros, Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE JOHNNY JONES. (6 reels). Star, Johnny Hines. This one did a nice business for us. A fine picture. Good comedy and action. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Appeals to all classes. All classes, town of 4,500. Admission 10-30. J. Angros, Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

LOVER OF CAMILLE. (7,180 feet). Star, Monte Blue. Personally I think this about the silliest picture to date. Too much love, but I heard some rave over it as wonderful. So that's that. Tone, couldn't see any. Sunday, no. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

NARROW STREET. (6,700 feet). Star, Dorothy Devore. Funny? I'll say it is and so will your patrons. A comedy drama, ridiculous and sublime. A story of an absent-minded boob who finally wakes up, bests his tormentors and wins the girl. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

TIGER ROSE. (8,000 feet). Star, Lenore Ulric. Fine acting by a bunch of unknown stars, wonderful scenery, excellent photography, film like new and a story that held 'em spellbound from the third reel to the end. The cameraman who handled this job knew his stuff. Good paper. Would call this picture "An extra good feature," but owing to the unknown stars would not advise the boys to play at special prices. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Strong audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS. (6,200 feet). Star, Rin Tin Tin (dog). Great picture. Pleased our patrons one hundred per oent. Big business on this one. Don't be afraid to advertise; the dog is wonderful. Okay for special. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, okay. All classes, town of 4,500. Admission 10-30. J. Angros, Palace Theatre (400 seats), Leechburg, Pennsylvania.

Comedies

BILL COLLECTOR. (Grand Ascher). Star, Joe Rock. This actually got a few laughs. The best Grand Ascher of six I have used but not much at that. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, sixty per cent. Masses, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

BUCCANEERS. (Pathe). "Our Gang." The finest kid comedy yet. The adults will think this the best ever. The children like them anyway. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Co., Menands, New York.

CAKE EATER. (Pathe). Star, Will Rogers. This one gets lots of laughs. Sunday, yes. Factory class. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

GOOD MORNING. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. I think Lloyd will make any patron glad he has seen this one. After a week's time since showing it, they still talk of it. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

HAVE MERCY. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. An average Cameo one reeler. It helped round out our program with a long feature. I believe that Cameos are the best one reelers on the market today. Tone, okay. Fair audience appeal. Better class, town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HIGH GEAR. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. Very good Vernon comedy. Many good laughs throughout. Also played "French Pastry." Both very good. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. Suburban class, town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. H. Warren Rible, Mayfield Theatre (210 seats), Mayfield, California.

HOLD EVERYTHING. (Educational Christie Comedy). Star, Bobby Vernon. A dainty comic, lots of action which brings the laughs. Sunday, yes. Factory class. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

JEALOUS FISHERMAN. (Pathe). Very few laughs, yet the people liked it. The majority of people never tire looking at Aesops Fables. Sunday, yes. Factory class. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

GERTRUDE ASTOR
In William Fox's coming feature, "Kings of the Turf."

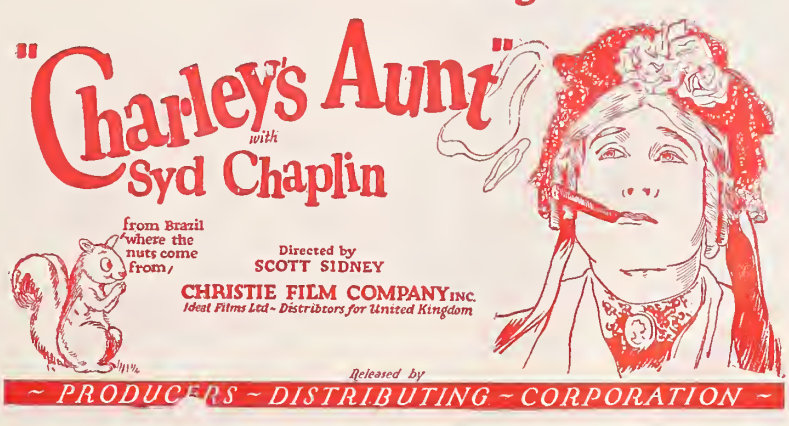
LEND ME YOUR HUSBAND. (Columbia). Made for small towns but no good in Morgantown. Something missing. Mixed class, city of 16,000. Admission 15-30. Herbert A. Shaw, Metropolitan Theatre (1,300 seats), Morgantown, West Virginia.

LODGE NIGHT. (Pathe). "Our Gang." A roar from start to finish. Everyone likes these kid comedies. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Masses, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

LOOK OUT BELOW. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. This is a good comedy that pleased all and brought plenty of laughs. Conley very good. Tone, okay. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

LOW BRIDGE. (Century Comedy). Star, Buddy Messinger. Buddy and the little negro "Bubbles" are a splendid comedy team. Real good comedy in this. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. Masses, town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

NERVE TONIC. (Educational). Star, Jimmie Adams. Suited the kids one hundred per cent. Not so favorable to the adults. Lots o' nerve racking experiences to a nervous individual who is finally cured in the ten remaining feet of the second reel. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.



ONE GLORIOUS FOURTH. (M. J. Winkler). Just a fair kid comedy they try to imitate "Our Gang" but make a fizzle of it, although it is worth showing. Print new. Tone, none. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

REEL VIRGINIAN. (Pathe). Star, Ben Turpin. A better than average Turpin comedy. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fine audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

ROUGHEST AFRICA. (Pathe). Star, Stan Laurel. Lots of laughs in second reel. A few in first. Print good. Sunday, yes. Factory class. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

STAGE FRIGHT. (Pathe). "Our Gang." These comedies are nearly all good. Will draw extra business regardless of the feature. Film not the best. Pathe don't keep them up. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, ninety-five per cent. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

STAY SINGLE. (Educational). Good comedy. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

STRETCHING THE TRUTH. (Fox). A very good comedy. Will please the kiddies as well as the grownups. Print fair. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

SWEET PAPA. (Fox). This is the kind of comedy that brings them back for more. Sunday, yes. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

TOO MANY MAMAS. (Pathe). A single reel comedy that is just fair. Nothing to rave about. Photography is rather poor. Have had much better singles. Audience appeal, off. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

UNCLE SAM. (Educational). A fair comic, no howling success. Print good. Sunday, yes. Factory class. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WEDDING SHOWERS. (Educational Mermaid). Star, Lige Conley. An excellent slapstick comedy and will suit any audience. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

YANKEE SPIRIT. (Educational). Star, Ben Alexander. A good kid comedy with plenty action and a good many laughs. It's worth playing. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Serials

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Star, Edna Murphy. This is probably the best serial that was ever made, at least this is the universal opinion of every person who saw it at my theatre. It is logical enough for the most critical audience and has every element necessary for a really A No. 1 production. Picturts of this standard build up a good serial patronage. Pathe should be proud of it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Very great audience appeal. Rural class, town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

IRON MAN. (Universal). Star, Albertenia. Boys, this is a good serial, am on my last chapter of it. Surely did pull them. Boost and play same. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. General audience appeal. General class town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre (260 seats), Buena Vista, Virginia.

TEN SCARS MAKE A MAN. (Pathe). Star, Allene Ray. This seriel is just about the nearest approach to "absolutely nothing" of anything ever shown at my theatre. It drags through ten chapters of the most tiresome, uninteresting and unappealing plot it has ever been my misfortune to see presented on the screen. There is not a single redeeming quality, it simply "isn't." Pathe should take this frost out of service. It is a detriment anyway you look at it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Audience appeal, zero. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-30. J. D. Warnock, Luna Theatre (350 seats), Battle Creek, Iowa.

WOLVES OF THE NORTH. (Universal). Star, William Duncan. Just an ordinary serial. Duncan doesn't draw for us anymore. Maybe it's serials that don't draw. This is our last serial. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. W. G. Enloe, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

Short Subjects

FIGHT AND WIN SERIES. (Universal). Star, Jack Dempsey. Nothing to them. I paid about three times what they are worth. They don't draw a little bit. It certainly was a poor buy for me. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Mixed class town of 3,000. Admission 20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GO GETTERS. (F. B. O.) Star, Alberta Vaughn. Going over good. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Okay audience appeal. Oil field class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. H. E. Schlichter, Liggett Theatre (600 seats), Madison, Kansas.

JACK DEMPSEY SERIES. (Universal). Star, Jack Dempsey. We fell for these but our patrons didn't. If you haven't bought these suggest you don't. Direction is good but "Jack" cannot act. Not suitable for any day. Audience appeal, missing. Middle class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. W. G. Enloe, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

PLASTIGRAMS. (Educational). This is a good novelty that you can advertise and bring in a crowd on the curiosity of same. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Appeals to all. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

Independent

CALIBRE 45. (State Right). Star, Franklyn Farnum. Fairly good western that didn't please the majority, but this is better than some of the other Farnum's that have been played recently. Franklyn Farnum a losing bet as attendance on nights he is shown has been dropping. Tone, fair. Sunday, questionable. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15, 35, on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MIDNIGHT EXPRESS. (5,967 feet). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. A railroad melodrama with suspense and thrills running through the entire six reels. A realistic railroad collision that made them jump. (See "Signal Tower"). Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class, city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

OUTWITTED. (State Right). Star, Helen Holmes. A good breezy program picture in five reels. Plenty of action. Good scenery and good photography. Pleased majority. Bought right. Fair house. All satisfied. Nuf sed. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

RARIN' TO GO. (Weiss Brothers). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. A great improvement over Buddy Roosevelt, still Buffalo Bill is a long way from being a great star. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes, city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

SURE FIRE FLINT. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. This was our second run on this. Gave good satisfaction and registered fair draw at box office. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair audience appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

THIRST. (State Right). Star cast. Very good comedy that packs. Many laughs. Should find the funny bone of most any patron. Fair audience appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

UP IN MARY'S ATTIC. (State Right). Star, Eva Novak. This is a big piece of cheese and so lay off of it. It's handled by Fred Wilson. Tone, no. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, twenty per cent. All classes town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. C. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (300 seats), Valliant, Oklahoma.

VIC DYSON PAYS. (Arrow). Star, Ben Wilson. Star not what he used to be but sure pleased the western fans. Plenty of fighting in this picture that's what fans expect in a western feature. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (298 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

melodramatic climax, but Director Edward Laemmle seems to have put on the brakes slightly when an emotional scene occurred. In some cases his restraint is admirable from an artistic viewpoint, but since the film's appeal will be especially for the Irish and Italians, he might have allowed the characters to be a bit more sentimentally eloquent, and the introduction of more comedy would not have been amiss.

The fight in the restaurant, where the cop holds off a gang of the politician's ruffians, is so excellently done as to stir the emotions. Rawlinson is realistic as the policeman, whether walking the beat, making love or fighting, and Miss Bellamy is a charming heroine. In fact, all of the players are well cast.

Tita Sartori.....Madge Bellamy
Gregorio Vitti.....Nick de Ruiz
Carlo Guido.....Andre de Beranger
Tony Sartori.....Cesare Gravina
Pat Malone.....Jackie Morgan
Morna Malone.....Dorothy Brock
Cesare Martinnelli.....D. J. Mitsoras

Story by Gerald Beaumont.
Adapted by E. Richard Schayer.
Directed by Edward Laemmle.
Length, 5,634 feet.

Story

Officer Tom Conlin falls in love with Tita Sartori, daughter of a florist. She loves him but because he is caring for two children she believes him married and considers yielding to the suit of a crooked Italian politician. The politician kills a Neapolitan youth also in love with her and locks Tita in his apartment. The policeman rescues her and captures the murderer after a battle in a restaurant, and Tita learns that Tom is single.

"Back to Life"

Changing Wounded Man's Appearance by Rebuilding Face Furnishes Interesting Theme for Film

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

One of the developments of the World War was the perfection of the art of plastic surgery to the point where doctors were able to rebuild the faces of soldiers who had been mutilated by shell fire. This furnishes the keynote to the theme on which the Whitman Bennett production "Back to Life," distributed by Associated Exhibitors, is founded.

Andrew Soutar developed this idea in his novel "Back From the Dead," in which an aviator undergoes such an operation with the result that his features are entirely changed. Returning home he finds that he has been reported dead and his wife has remarried. How his wife, who did not recognize him, finally learned his real identity and affairs were finally straightened out so that they were re-united, furnishes the story of this picture.

Here is an unusual theme with picture possibilities. There is good drama in the plight of a man who because of circumstances cannot reveal his identity to his own wife. Some of the situations have been somewhat drawn out and do not seem altogether plausible, but in developing the psychological side action has been slighted with the effect of slowing down the tempo. The picture speeds up towards the end and there is a melodramatic climax in which the second husband conveniently falls dead.

David Powell does good work as the hero but the effect of the illusion is somewhat weakened by the fact that he is not seen prior to his accident and as he has made no attempt to disguise his real features after they are supposed to have been rebuilt, he will be easily recognized by fans who have seen him in other pictures. Patsy Ruth Miller is excellently cast as the girl, with Lawford Davidson doing good work as the other husband in a heavy role. Mary Thurman shows to advantage in a minor role and Frankie Evans is appealing as the boy. In fact the entire cast is high class.

Due principally to its unusual theme which holds the interest, and the work of the players, we believe that this picture will prove entertaining to the average patron.

Sonny Lothbury.....Frankie Evans

Based on Andrew Soutar's novel, "Back from the Dead."
A Whitman Bennett production.
Length, 5,628 feet.

Story

During the great war John Lothbury joins the French air forces. His brother Arthur embezzles $15,000 from his employer, Straker, blaming it on John, saying he was in the deal to use it for aeroplane experiments. The French government reports John as dead, and to save John's name his wife, Margaret, marries Straker, who is cruel to their boy, Sonny. John, however, has recovered and his face, which was blown away, is made over so he looks like another person. John finally returns home and learns the truth. He eventually works up to the head of a rival company to whom Straker is in debt, and when the Strakers go to Europe he takes care of Sonny. Later John agrees to extend Straker's notes for Margaret's sake. Straker becomes jealous and goes to him, but as the result of dissipation his heart is weak and he falls dead from excitement.

"Jimmie's Millions"

F. B. O. Offers Typical Richard Talmadge Vehicle With Entertaining Array of Athletic Stunts

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Richard Talmadge's starring vehicles which are distributed by F. B. O. have shown that they can be counted on for pep, speed, action, athletic stunts or variety and profusion and a pleasing romantic angle, and "Jimmie's Millions" is no exception. It should thoroughly satisfy this star's growing army of fans.

This time, Richard is seen as a chap whose main fault is that of never being on time. His uncle, knowing this weakness, leaves his millions to Dick provided he report to the lawyer on a certain date and hour for three consecutive months, otherwise the fortune goes to a cousin. Dick is in love with the lawyer's cousin but can only see her at the appointed time.

Here you have the gist of the story which provides typical Talmadge material. It is easy to guess from this, the line the action will take. Of course the nephew conspires to make Richard late at these appointments, and Richard uses all his ingenuity and athletic ability to be on time.

The situations are not always plausible, for the film has been fashioned with the idea of giving Richard every chance to do stunt stuff, but it keeps moving at a fast clip and makes good entertainment for the average patron. Talmadge engages in several fights, is arrested for murder as the cousin spirits away the other fellow. Gets out of jail by means of a ruse, eludes a private detective, appears twice on time and finally fails, as he is chasing the man supposed to be murdered. There is another fight and more stunts, ending with the bringing of the "murdered" man into court. Richard gets the fortune and the girl.

There are several scenes in which Talmadge's climbing, jumping, tumbling and other stunts are effectively used and some good comedy is contributed by Lee Moran as a private detective. Talmadge has a role that suits him, and Betty Francisco is attractive as the girl. The remainder of the support all does capable work.

Story by John Moroso.
Scenario by Frank H. Clark.
Directed by James P. Hogan.
Length, 5,167 feet.

Story

John is always late and when his rich uncle dies he stipulates that he will receive his estate, running into millions, if he reports to Lawyer Ball on time at a certain day and hour for three months. Otherwise the estate goes to another nephew, Saunders. Sounders immediately conspires to get the money and when John gets into a fight he bribes the other party, Johnson, to disappear, and John is arrested for murder. Through a ruse of his friend, John gets out of the cell, and suddenly sees Johnson in a car. He follows him and captures him, bringing him to the courtroom. The case is dismissed, but John believes he has lost the estate by not reporting, but the lawyer tells him it is his as Saunders has obtained it through fraud. John also wins the hand of Ball's Ward, Susan, with whom he is in love.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"His Marriage Wow"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

It seems safe to say that Harry Langdon, Mack Sennett's comedy find, is rising in the public's favor faster than any other comedian on the screen. This latest vehicle should increase his prestige, for it is a pippin for humor. Some of the gags are new, but the principal idea behind the picture is well known. Nevertheless, Langdon's exquisite sense of comedy values and his wonderful facial expressions make one forget that they have ever seen the plot before. He gets in the wrong church, tries to retrieve money he has given the wrong minister, loses courage and tries to fly when about to be married, and suspects that, because he has life insurance, his wife's family is trying to poison him. An able foil to Langdon is the part of an undiscovered lunatic who by whisperings turns Langdon's happiness to gall and wormwood. The comedy ends with a series of great scenes where the lunatic gives Langdon a wild joy-ride. Book this. You can't go wrong on it. That applies to any class of patronage.—S. S.

"Plain and Fancy Girls"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Charley Chase is featured in this Hal Roach subject, supported by Martha Sleeper, Katherin Grant and S. J. Sandford under the direction of Leo McCarey. While there are a number of distinctively humorous touches in it, the comedy is chiefly notable for the work of Miss Sleeper. She scores in a rube role and looks as though she may develop into a first-class comedienne. The scenes occur in a park and delineate a scrap between lovers, with each commandeering new sweethearts to spite the other.—S. S.

"Clean-Up Week"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

The time nears for the annual spring cleaning and Paul Terry's little characters anticipate it by industriously scrubbing out their homes. The cat does a Mary Pickford skating act with the scrub brushes, while the mice put every handicap in his (or her) way. The subject winds up with the inevitable chase, in which the cat and the farmer pursue those pesky mice. It's all good fun and very well drawn.—S. S.

Pathe Review No. 9

The leading subject is the second installment in "The Prettiest Girl I Know" series. Mack Sennett's contribution is especially noteworthy, and the manner of its presentation novel and effective. Other subjects are "Keeping Faith with Fuji," scenes of a Japanese pilgrimage to the sacred mountain, and Pathecolor views of the old Spanish city of Toledo.—S. S.

"The Haunted Honeymoon"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Blanche Mehaffey and Glenn Tryon are the principal artists in this comedy, supported by James Finlayson, Yorke Sherwood, George Rowe, Helen Gilmore and Jules Mendel. It details a wedding gone wrong by reason of the substitution of a dog license for the marriage certificate, and the occupation by the bride and groom of a haunted house. Various incidents lead them to believe there really are ghosts around them, especially when their parents and the clergymen enter the house to correct the certificate mix-up. This comedy is of average appeal, possessing some very amusing moments and some familiar gags.—S. S.

"Paris Creations in Color"

(Educational—Fashion—One Reel)

This is the second of a series of "Paris Creations in Color" displayed by Hope Hampton through the McCall Color Fashion News and distributed by Educational. As the title implies, the picture has to do with latest ideas in dresses for all occasions by leading Parisian modistes. Miss Hampton charmingly displays these gowns which are emphasized and made entertaining by gorgeous coloring and beautiful backgrounds.—T. W.

"Half a Hero"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Lloyd Hamilton is a tramp one minute, a cop another, a formal gentleman the next and a referee in a prize ring as the grand finale in "Half a Hero." It's a comedy of the slapstick variety and this probably accounts for these many changes, unaccountable as far as the story goes. Hamilton fans will find in his latest the usual number of laughs and perhaps a few more. As the traffic cop Hamilton does a lot of racing about and finally catches up with a speed queen who introduces him to her banker father. The cop's uniform is from then on replaced by a full dress suit. A prize fight for a milk fund is quite funny, with Hamilton as referee being battered about by both fighters. Many familiar slapstick stunts, all proven laugh provokers, are used to advantage in "Half a Hero." Hamilton is supported by Dorothy Seastrom, Babe London, William Horn and Buster Brodie.—T. W.

"The Raspberry Romance"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Followers of Ben Turpin will like this Mack Sennett subject featuring the cross-eyed hero, with a supporting cast composed of Blanche Payson, Jack Cooper, Leo Sulky and Madeline Hurlock. Ben is to marry Blanche, who is somewhat heftier than himself, and tries to make good as a singer on the old home town Opera House stage, being greeted with vegetables. Circumstantial evidence points to his having vamped a married woman, and the husband pursues him onto the stage. There, the audience applauds Ben's frenzied attempts at escape and the husband's pistol shots, thinking them drama. Finally Ben's gigantic wife-to-be effects a rescue. This is good comedy.—S. S.

Lloyd's Fall Release

Harold's Next Pathe Feature Still in Process of Making

According to advices received from the Harold Lloyd Corporation this leading screen comedian's next production for Pathe will be completed, as far as the actual camera work is concerned, in the latter part of April or early May. Allowing time for cutting and titling and the necessary publicity, advertising and exploitation preliminaries the picture will be ready for release in the early fall.

In the matter of time consumed and the money spent this production promises to be the most ambitious one ever undertaken by Harold Lloyd. The actual shooting on it began on October 15th. Already twenty-two weeks have been spent on it with a possibility that the production time will be run into ten or eleven months.

Lloyd is being supported by several of the screen's younger luminaries, including, of course, Jobyna Ralston, as his leading lady; Brooks Benedict, as heavy; Hazel Keener, James Anderson and Joe Harrington. The latter is one of the pioneers of the motion-picture acting profession and can recount the days as far back as 1898 when he made his first appearance in a mutascope.

Sam Taylor and Fred Newmeyer who handled the direction of the Lloyd successes, "Hot Water," "Girl Shy" and "Safety Last" are once more teamed in the direction of the new Harold Lloyd comedy.

Mal St. Clair Will Direct

Harry Cohn announces that Mal St. Clair will direct the last of the Eight Columbia specials, "After Business Hours." St. Clair's recent productions were "Find Your Man" and "The Lighthouse by the Sea." He will have a very excellent cast to work with in this picture. Among them are Elaine Hammerstein, Lou Tellegen, Phyllis Haver, John Patrick, Otto Hoffman, William Scott and Lee Moran. "After Business Hours" was adapted from a Hearst Magazine story, "Everything Money Can Buy," by Ethel Watts Mumford.

Chadwick Signs Charles Ray

I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, who is supervising production for that company in California, has signed Charles Ray for a series of four pictures to be made this year. Several well known books and plays are now being considered for the first of the Ray productions, and it is expected that this new Chadwick unit will be active shortly. The director and cast, together with the title of the first picture, will be announced next week. All of the Ray pictures will be made at the Chadwick West Coast Studios.

Since his rise to stardom, Charles Ray has been among the leading male stars of the screen. In his first star productions, he established himself in a unique type of comedy drama that placed his without a rival in the field he thus created.

No announcement as to the nature of the stories Mr. Ray would make was forthcoming at the Chadwick offices this week, but it was said that at least one of the series would be typical of the pictures wbicb won him his great international following.

The announcement that Charles Ray has been added to the list of Chadwick stars is a further indication of the expansion planned by this company for the coming season. The Chadwick roster for the new year includes Lionel Barrymore, Theda Bara, Larry Semon and George Walsh. From this it would seem that Chadwick Pictures Corporation will have approximately a 100 per cent production increase over last year.

Anita Stewart Kept Busy

Goes Directly From "The Boomerang" To "Baree, Son Kazan"

In signing a contract to star in Vitagraph's "Baree, Son of Kazan," Anita Stewart has returned to her first love. Like many other picture celebrities, Miss Stewart had her start with that company and it was under the Vitagraph banner that she rose to stardom.

Having just completed production work on B. P. Schulberg's picture, "The Boomerang," Miss Stewart was in the act of boarding a train for New York, when a picture representative rushed through the Los Angeles station to the train shed and halted her. When told that she was wanted for a Vitagraph production she expressed entire willingness to postpone her trip. She drove back uptown and after a brief discussion of arrangements with David Smith, who is producing "Baree, Son of Kazan," the contract was signed.

"Baree, Son of Kazan," is the second consecutive picture in which Donald Keith, who has the leading man role, that of Jim Carvel, will have played with Anita Stewart. In "The Boomerang," he appears with her and Bert Lytell.

Planning Larger Quarters

Weiss Brotbers' Artclass Pictures Corporation Are in Need of Additional Space

Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation are planning to take over additional space in the Loew State Theatre Building, 1540 Broadway, in order to make room for the press books and other advertising accessories on the Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr., series and their other numerous attractions.

Formerly this material was shipped directly from the manufacturers and was stored by him, but so many mistakes and delays occurred and so much confusion of orders resulted, that Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures determined to handle all shipments to their exchanges and theatres, as far as possible, directly from their own offices. In this way it is possible to ship out orders on the same day that they are received, an advantage which Louis Weiss, managing executive of Artclass, declares far outweighs all other considerations and insures the promptest kind of service to their franchise holders.

This increase in the size of the Weiss Brothers' offices has been necessitated by two new Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr. 1925 series, and the third series of eight five reel action-stunt features, with a well known Western star making twenty-four in all, which Artclass will handle this year, in addition to their regular complement of specials.

More Players Added to Casts

Two additions each to the casts of "Chickie" and "The Necessary Evil," which Earl Hudson is producing for First National, were announced at the company's New York studios. Hudson announced that the casts are nearing completion.

Olive Tell will play the role of Ila in "Chickie." Louise Mackintosh will play the part of Mrs. Dunne in the same picture. Thomas Holding will play David Devanant in "The Necessary Evil," and Arthur Housman will play "Pug."

Reorganization Plan for Columbia Pictures Corp.

WITH the arrival of Harry Cohn in New York from Los Angeles, the organization of Columbia Pictures has been completed.

For the last five years Joe Brandt, Harry Cohn and Jack Cohn have been conducting their business under the trade name of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has heretofore distributed pictures made at its own studio and those that were made by other producers. When the C. B. C. Company was organized it was intended to distribute feature releases produced by independent producers, and it was not the intention of Cohn, Brandt and Cohn at that time to enter into the production field themselves.

The desire to maintain an average standard of high quality production induced the C. B. C. officials to enter into the producing field themselves and for the last two years they have successfully produced many independent pictures which have been released under the Columbia Pictures trade-mark.

In order to carry out the original policy of the C. B. C. Company, it was decided by Cohn-Brandt-Cohn to separate the activities of their organization so that C. B. C. would again distribute pictures made by independent producers of high grade calibre, and the Columbia Pictures Corporation was formed, with the same personnel as the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, to conduct the activities of the production of pictures release under the Columbia trademark.

Cohn-Brandt-Cohn are well on their way with the plans for the 1925-26 season and have acquired for the C. B. C. Company, who will continue to function the same as heretofore, the picture which Norman Dawn made in Alaska, "Justice of the Far North."

The Columbia Pictures Corporation has perfected its plans for the season 1925-26 and will distribute eighteen pictures. Six pictures under the Columbia Pictures trademark; six pictures under the Waldorf trademark, and six pictures under the Perfection trademark. All of these pictures will be made by Harry Cohn at the coast.

Elaine Hammerstein has been engaged to appear in three of the Columbia Pictures and negotiations are now under way for the acquisition of other big stars for the Columbia series.

Contracts are about to be signed for the stars to appear in the Waldorf series.

The contract with William Fairbanks was renewed for another series of six pictures, and he will be included in the cast of the Perfection Pictures.

A contract has also been signed with Dorothy Revier, who is coming to the front very rapidly, and gives promise of being one of the real "finds" of the season.

Harry Cohn will remain in New York for a few weeks to purchase several stories which Columbia has secured options on and to complete negotiations for a larger studio which Columbia Pictures Corporation will take over on Mr. Cohn's return to the coast.

Warner Bros. Buy Novels

To their growing list of books and plays to be made into next year's screen classics, Warner Bros. have added "The Inevitable Millionaires" by the prolific E. Phillips Oppenheim, and "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted," by Gertie Wentworth James, noted English writer.

"The Wizard of Oz" Goes Big at World Premiere in Los Angeles

A telegram received by the New York offices of Chadwick Pictures Corporation from Julius K. Johnson, manager of the Forum Theatre in Los Angeles, indicates that Chadwick's "The Wizard of Oz" will be one of the big pictures of the year. Thousands were turned away on Saturday, the opening day, and the advance sale exceeds every record since the opening of the theatre. Mr. Johnson's telegram follows:

"Accept my congratulations on one of the biggest box office attractions that I have seen in fifteen years of motion picture presentation. We opened today with 'The Wizard of Oz' to biggest business in history of our beautiful Forum Theatre in Los Angeles. At our matinee today we turned away fully two thousand people and tonight on our premier opening which was the greatest premier ever given in the city of Los Angeles we turned away thousands. Honestly you have the greatest box office bet I have yet seen and any exhibitor who passes this up ought to quit the game. Let them wire me and I will put them right. I look for a tremendous run on this picture and take my word you have a positive clean up in 'The Wizard of Oz.' This is straight from the shoulder of Julius K. Johnson, manager of the Forum Theatre, Los Angeles."

The management of the Forum Theatre had originally booked "The Wizard of Oz," for one month, but advices received from Mr. Chadwick subsequent to his telegram of the opening night indicate that the engagement will be extended for a considerable period.

Engages Prominent Players

William Steiner announces the engagement of Lou Tellegen, Rockliff Fellows, Gaston Glass and Betty Francisco, for the fourth Edith Thornton production "Fair Play." Earl Williams is her principal support in the picture just completed which is called "Was it Bigamy?"

English Exploitation

How George Smith's Films, Ltd., Is Putting Over Artclass Westerns

George Smith's Films, Ltd., who handle the Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt series in Great Britain for Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, have arranged a decidedly novel national exploitation stunt on the pictures of these popular young ridin' stars, according to advices just received by Louis Weiss, vice-president and managing executive of Artclass Pictures.

Arrangements have been made with "The Boys Cinema," a popular priced weekly magazine with a very large circulation in Great Britain, to carry each week a complete novelization of one of the Buffalo Bill, Jr., or Buddy Roosevelt pictures, beginning about May 1, for a period of sixteen weeks.

In addition to the widespread publicity which will be received through this medium, an added impetus will be given bookings on both series by means of an essay contest to be conducted simultaneously by "The Boy's Cinema," with the publication of the stories. Essays of not more than two hundred words, telling why the writer thinks Buddy Roosevelt or Buffalo Bill, Jr., deserve the title of the most popular of the western stars, in England, and what they regard as the outstanding reason for this popularity among British boys, will be invited, for the best of which suitable prizes will be awarded.

Chief among these prizes will be a sombrero, lariat and a pair of spurs from Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt, which they have worn in some of their pictures and which the stars have undertaken to furnish.

The stunt was evolved and arranged by Miss Billie Bristow, who directs the publicity for George Smith's Films, Ltd., and the novelization to be published in "The Boys Cinema" will also be written by her.

"Love Goofy" Title of Adams Comedy

"Love Goofy" has been chosen as the title of the Christie Comedy in which Jimmie Adams has been working for the last four weeks. Antiquated automobiles, reminiscent of the days of peg trousers and picture hats, will be a feature of the comedy. Kathleen Myers will be Adams' leading lady.

Berger Speeds "Fifty-Fifty" Backed by Camera Corps

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS announces that this week finds the Henri Diamant Bergert producing unit, working at the Jackson Studios, New York City, well in advance of its originally planned camera schedule for the picturizing of the popular story of Robert Shirley, entitled "Fifty-Fifty." This production will be the first of a series of feature photoplays to be made by the Diamant Films Company for Associated Exhibitors release.

This rapid progress on the part of the camera staff engaged in the filming of "Fifty-Fifty" reflects the expertness of the director, Henri Diamant Berger, whose prowess as a motion-picture producer and director is well known both in this country and abroad. Numbered among the prominent Frenchman's outstanding picture successes are the Continental film version of Alexandre Dumas' "The Three Musketeers," screened in this country under the title of "My Lady," and 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," made in 1915. A more recent production made by Mr. Berger is "Twenty Years After," shortly to be released in America.

In adapting "Fifty-Fifty" for screen presentation, Mr. Berger has secured a story that is both modern in theme and replete with rapid-fire action. The principal locales are located in Paris and New York City. Some striking highlights of the production will be the reproducing of the famous New York Bar in the French capital; an expose of the notorious Grand Duke's tour of the Paris underworld, through which no tourist may go without police protection, and some highly interesting atmosphere scenes in Paris, including a number of typical Apache resorts of the present day.

A cast of well-known screen players has been engaged to enact the leading characterizations, headed by Lionel Barrymore, Hope Hampton, Louise Glaum, Arthur Donaldson, J. Moy Bennett and Jean Del Val.

Start More Gump Comedies

With the arrival of Samuel Von Ronkel at Universal City, another series of Andy Gump motion picture comedies is planned for early filming at Universal City.

Mr. Von Ronkel, who stopped off in Chicago for a week to collaborate with Sidney Smith, creator of the Gump cartoons, states that the second series of Gump pictures is the result of the insistent demand from the exhibitors throughout the country for more Gumps.

Work will soon start on the first picture and upon the completion of the entire series it is planned to do a feature with Andy Gump as the leading character.

"The Fall of Jerusalem"

The Tudor, New Orleans, Books Weiss Brothers' Spectacle Film

"The Fall of Jerusalem," Weiss Brothers' historic spectacle film, has been booked for a week's run at the Tudor, one of New Orleans' leading theatres, beginning Wednesday, February 25, according to an announcement by Louis Weiss, vice-president and managing executive of Artclass Pictures.

J. Eugene Pearce, manager and owner of the Tudor Theatre, plans to exploit this feature on a scale unusual even among the biggest attractions in the Gulf City. In addition to an intensive newspaper advertisng campaign and special heralds and "stunts," he has ordered 2,000 one sheets, 300 threes and 100 sixes for billing the feature.

The Tudor will also play a return booking on Weiss Brothers' Biblical feature, "After Six Days," opening for an indefinite run on April 5, after showing the picture in January for ten days to crowded houses.

HERMAN F. JANS

The president of Jans Productions, Inc., is now on tour placing "Playthings of Desire," and "The Mad Dancer," the first two of his series of six independent features.

Starts on New Series

Evelyn Brent, Following Rest, Will Begin on List of Feature Productions

With the completion of her four pictures for F. B. O., Evelyn Brent is taking a hard earned rest and will vacation for a week or two at Palm Springs while plans for the first of her new series of productions are completed at the studio.

The new program calls for eight pictures featuring Miss Brent for 1925. The success of "Silk Stocking Sal," and "Midnight Molly," and the fact that "Forbidden Cargo" which she has just completed, shapes up as the best picture thus far produced, have determined General Studio Manager B. P. Fineman and other officials of the organization to keep Miss Brent largely in fast-moving melodramas with a "crook" flavor, although there may be some departure from this plan in one or two of the coming productions.

Casting for the first of the new Brent series will begin in a few days. The title has not yet been settled, but the script will be an adaptation of a story by a well known magazine and screen writer.

Wins Popularity Contest

Norma Shearer, popular Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star, has won a popularity contest held by George J. Wehner, a New York exhibitor owning a string of twelve theatres, six in Brooklyn, five in Manhattan and one in Jersey City. Mr. Wehner staged the competition for the purpose of ascertaining which star his patrons wanted chiefly to see. Wehner is now booking all available pictures in which Miss Shearer appears, and is in addition featuring her name in all of the advertising matter emanating from his offices, with the result that increased attendance has been reported by his various theatres. This method of making sure of the tastes of a theatre's clientele is one that may well be followed by exhibitors all over the country.

John Golden Is at Fox Coast Studio

John Golden, theatrical producer, is the latest celebrity to arrive at the Fox Film Corporation West Coast studios in Hollywood. The object of his visit is to cooperate with William Fox, who arrived in the Film City a week earlier, in supervising the start on production of the seven Golden stage successes that the motion picture producer will picturize as the "John Golden Unit of Golden Clean American Plays." This deal was the subject of much laudatory comment when it was announced last fall.

Daily conferences between the two men will be held from now until Mr. Golden returns East. One of the first matters they will consider is the selection of a suitable player to essay the role created by the late Frank Bacon in "Lightnin'." At present the producers are sifting through the mass of correspondence received from all parts of the globe in response to their request for suggestions from the public as to who would make the most fitting "Lightnin'."

When this matter is definitely decided Mr. Fox and Mr. Golden will settle back to arrange the plans for the actual filming of the plays. These include, in addition to "Lightnin'," "Seventh Heaven," "Thank U," "Howdy Folks," "The First Year," "Chicken Feed" and "The Wheel."

The importance of the Golden group of plays in their relation to the Fox 1925-26 program of photoplay releases is attested to by the care with which every detail in connection with them is handled. For instance, although the continuity writers for Fox pictures include some of the best in the industry. Mr. Fox hired the very best, Frances Marion, to write the scenario for "Lightnin'" and "Thank U." She will, in all probability, handle the scripts of the remaining five, too.

For the direction of the Golden screen transitions Mr. Fox is now aligning his most capable directors. John Ford and Emmett Flynn. These two men are without peers in their field. Mr. Ford, although only twenty-nine years old, is the man who directed the Fox epic "The Iron Horse." Mr. Flynn is the genius who wielded the megaphone for the filming of never-to-be-forgotten success, "The Connecticut Yankee."

Mr. Ford, it is said, is Mr. Golden's personal choice as the man to direct "Lightin'." If this is so it will be a rare honor for the youthful director. Flynn is being considered for "Seventh Heaven," next in importance to "Lightnin'" in the Golden group.

Alyce Mills Off to Coast

Alyce Mills left New York last week for the coast, where she will begin work with B. P. Schulberg Productions. Miss Mills first role will be in "Faint Perfume," which Gasnier will direct from Zona Gale's novel.

ANTRIM SHORT

Has played in support of the greatest screen stars. Now playing in "Wildfire," which T. Hayes Hunter is directing for Distinctive Pictures, Inc.

Antrim Short Signed

Member of Splendid Cast Directed by T. Hayes Hunter in "Wild-Fire"

Antrim Short, one of the fastest climbing young leading men in motion pictures today, has been signed for a role in "Wild-Fire," which T. Hayes Hunter is directing for Distinctive Pictures, Inc., at the Brooklyn studios of Vitagraph.

The players, headed by Aileen Pringle, Holmes Herbert, Edmund Breese and Edna Murphy, and including Lawford Davidson and Mr. Short, are expected to go to Cuba, for exteriors, next week.

Mr. Short will be remembered by the fans for his work in some of the outstanding features of the last two or three seasons, including "Beauty's Worth," with Marion Davies; "The Son of Wallingford," a Vitagraph special; "Black Beauty," also a Vitagraph special; "O'Malley of the Mounted," with William S. Hart; "The Right of Way," with Bert Lytell; "Old Lady 31," a Metro special; "Please Get Married," Metro; "Fighting Cressy," with Blanche Sweet; "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," with Mary Pickford; "Tom Sawyer," with Jack Pickford; "Classmates," with Richard Barthelmess; "Greater Than Marriage," a Vitagraph special and in "Chronicles of America."

Flynn on Fourth F. B. O.

Maurice B. (Lefty) Flynn is now at work on his fourth starring vehicle for Film Booking Offices.

"O. U. West" is the tentative title of the new production, which was written and scenarized by Helen Broneau. Harry Garson is slated to direct, with Curley Dresden as assistant. Billy Tuers and Henry Kruse will be behind the cameras.

Ann May will play "Lefty's" leading lady, while the other prominent members of the cast are Milton Ross, Evelyn Francisco, Bill Donovan, Raymond Turner, Ed Burns and Fred Burns.

"Quo Vadis" Premiere in N. Y.; Emil Jannings Scores as "Nero"

ONE of the most brilliant motion picture premieres in New York City was that of First National's "Quo Vadis," at the Apollo Theatre, on Sunday night, Feb. 15. Not only did the picture open to capacity but there were 400 standees, and other hundreds were turned away. Many persons prominent in motion picture and theatrical circles were present and the new screen version of Sienkiewicz's famous novel, made in Rome by the Unione Cinematographica Italiana, was received with enthusiasm.

The presentation, prologue and musical score were under the direction of Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand Theatre, New York City, and was even better than the high standard which he has accustomed picture patrons to expect at his hands. The advertising and exploitation was conducted by Allen S. Glenn, supervisor of exploitation for First National, and his staff.

An unusual feature of the showing was the appearance of the world-famous violinist, Efrem Zimbalist, in the prologue, playing the violin obligatos from Jean Mougues' grand opera, "Quo Vadis," which has never been sung in this country. In fact much of the accompanying music throughout the screening was from the opera, "Quo Vadis," which may be said to have had its first introduction to America in connection with this showing of the picturized version of the story upon which the novel was based. The appearance of Zimbalist upon the program was due to the efforts of A. P. Waxman, of Mr. Glenn's exploitation staff, aided and abetted by the supervisor. His four selections were put "on the air" by stations WGBS in New York and WIP in Philadelphia, as were the arios and outstanding orchestra features of the opera.

This was Zimbalist's first appearance in connection with a motion picture and before the microphone. He is numbered among the half dozen greatest violinists of the day —Kreisler, Elman, Kubelik, Spaulding, Heifetz, Siedel—and his appearance marks the high water mark of the connection, constantly growing closer, between motion pictures and music.

The Plunkett Prologue

Mr. Plunkett's prologue showed a man made up as the Emperor Nero, on a balcony of his palace, overlooking the city of Rome, painted on a back-drop. It was during this prologue that Zimbalist played. As the prologue ended, the lights on the stage were dimmed and the stars came out in the Italian sky, and Kitty McLaughlin sang a song in Italian.

The new version of "Quo Vadis" was pronounced greatly superior to the first picture made from it by the reviewers of the New York newspapers, and one of the best spectacles which Italy has ever sent to us.

Dorothy Herzog of the Daily Mirror:—"'Quo Vadis' is a stupendous achievement with the incomparable Emil Jannings acting the role of Nero. The audience delighted in it as a spectacle, as a smartly directed and acted drama. We heartily recommend this picture. As a background for the action we have settings of unsurpassing beauty."

R. W. Jr. in the Herald Tribune:—"That incomparable screen actor, Emil Jannings, walked off with the honors of the picturization of "Quo Vadis"—a character study of Emperor Nero. His performance was an achievement that stands high among the cinema characterizations of recent seasons. Jannings dominated every moment of the picture."

Peter Milne in the Telegraph:—"'Quo Vadis' quite surpasses anything that has been done in this line heretofore. The high spots in the production are provided by Emil Jannings, whose Nero is an important addition to his notable library of characterizations. The burning of Rome is the most spectacular event in the picture."

Irene Thirer in the Daily News:—"The story has been most effectively done for the screen and Nero himself could not have made a better Nero than Emil Jannings, who is without a doubt the finest character actor the screen has as yet taken into its fold."

The Sun:—"The first really spectacular motion picture of the present season entered the movie sweepstakes on Broadway in 'Quo Vadis,' was shown at the Apollo. It is a thrilling photoplay. 'Quo Vadis' cannot fail to excite you. Perhaps the most striking feature of the new 'Quo Vadis' is the acting of Emil Jannings as the wicked emperor. There are chariot races, fire scenes, wild roman parties, etc., all the paraphernalia in fact, that goes with the glory and depravity that was Rome. It is well done and impressive."

step backward or the company back of the picture; a step which would be difficult to regain. Bluffers and gatherers of easy money should steer clear of that Mediterranean boot, throbbing with life and packing a wicked kick. Those who would win in Italy should go there with clean hands and, what is more essential, KEEP them clean. The axiom: "Rome was not built in a day" is a horrible joke for the film man who relies on American "speed" and wants to work "fast." In Italy foundations and buildings must be solid; it takes time to build well. No film distributing business can hope to succeed unless it be cemented with painstaking efforts, preservence and patience.

Distributing With a Purpose

Distributing "our own" in Italy, aside from the many advantages to the distributor, should give a powerful impetus to the film industry there, which, due to the war and to a score of lesser evils, is not in a florid condition. But it must be "distributing with a purpose"—the purpose of lifting the industry from the mire on to the higher and healthier place where it justly belongs. This can be accomplished with honest business methods and a careful selection of pictures that appeal to the Italian fan.

Italian distributors do not look with favor upon this movement and are already busy shouting for help against "The American Peril." And who can blame them? Have they not had things all their own way for years and years? Have they not bought American pictures whenever they saw fit and paid little or nothing for them? And then, with hardly an effort, sub-leased or rented them and raked in a goodly lot of money. Why should they not kick[When they handled American pictures the Italian producer was safe, but now that Americans essay to eliminate the middleman, they see a terrible menace in every American picture that enters Italy and frantically wave the SOS signal. No one heeds them. Italian exhibitors, who have been fed up on hodge-podge films and have noticed full houses when showing the red-corpuscled American product, have come to realize that the film industry can best be safeguarded through the revitalizing influence of the socalled "American Peril." Therefore, the exhibitors and the millions of Italian picture lovers welcome with open arms American capital, American companies, American pictures and American business tactics.

Woods Signs Stanley for "Beauty and the Bad Man"

FORREST STANLEY, who distinguished himself as "Brandon" in "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies, has been signed by Frank Woods for the principal male role of Modoc Bill Robley in "Beauty and the Bad Man," screen version of one of Peter B. Kyne's most popular magazine stories.

Modoc Bill is the second Kyne hero that Stanley has portrayed for the screen. Previously he appeared in the principal male role of "The Pride of Palomar," a Cosmopolitan production. His latest work prior to "Beauty and the Bad Man," was opposite Virginia Vallie in the screen version of Owen Davis' stage play, "Up the Ladder."

"Beauty and the Bad Man" is being filmed by the Peninsula Studios at San Mateo, under the direction of William Worthington. The continuity is by E. Richard Schayer and the picture is to be released through the Producers Distributing Corporation.

Others in the cast besides Stanley are Mabel Ballin, Russell Simpson, Edna Mae Cooper, Andre de Beranger, James Gordon, Guy Oliver, Dick La Reno and Cash Darrell.

Fox Buys Four Novels

Fox Makes Another Notable Purchase—Gets Four Gregory Books

Purchase of the screen rights of four of the recent novels by Jackson Gregory, one of the best known writers of Western fiction in the country, ranking with Zane Grey and James Oliver Curwood, and in the minds of many surpassing these noted writers of outdoor, he-man stuff, is announced by Fox Film Corporation.

This really noteworthy deal includes the following popular works: "The Everlasting Whisper," "The Outlaw," "Timber Wolf," and "Desert Valley."

"Timber Wolf," will be used as a Buck Jones starring vehicle and will be released as the final Jones film for the current season. Production on this picture will be started immediately at the Fox West Coast Studios.

The other three Greogory novels will form a part of the immense 1925-26 program of the Fox organization. "The Everlasting Whisper," according to tentative plans, will be the first Tom Mix starring production next season. Disposition of "The Outlaw," and "Desert Valley," has not been decided as yet but it is safe to assume that they will be used by either Mix or Jones, or divided between these two Fox Western stars.

Picked for Big Parts

Alma Rubens and Jack Mulhall Have Leading Roles in "She Wolves"

Alma Rubens, now a Fox Film Corporation star by reason of a long term contract she recently signed with that company, and Jack Mulhall, who established himself in the eyes of Fox officials by his work in "Folly of Vanity," have been selected to play the leading roles in "She Wolves," last of the Fox 1924-25 special productions to go in work.

Maurice Elvey, the noted English director will handle the filming of "She Wolves," which is an adaptation from the London, Paris and New York stage successes, "The Man in Evening Clothes," recently purchased from David Belasco and Henry Miller.

Grauman Books "Iron Horse"

The anxious city of Los Angeles, which has awaited with evident impatience to see "The Iron Horse," Fox Film Corporation screen epic, will have its long cherished desire fulfilled on February 21. On that date the celebrated John Ford production, which is now entering the eighth month of a sensational Broadway run, will be given its first showing in the city tha gave it birth, at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood.

B. P. SCHULBERG
Who will produce eighteen pictures next year for the independent market

Popular Star Comes Back

Clara Kimball Young Returns To Screen in Ivan Abramson's "Lying Wives"

Clara Kimball Young returns to the screen, after an absence of almost a year, in Ivan Abramson's new production, entitled "Lying Wives." The picture, which is being made here in the East, is the type which won for Miss Young earlier fame. The story is by Ivan Abramson.

Among a sterling cast of film-players, such well-known people as Madge Kennedy, Edna Murphy, Richard Bennett, Niles Welch and Buddy Harris will be seen in important roles. Interiors are being made at Tec-Art Studio in New York.

Special pains are being taken with the direction of "Lying Wives," due, firstly, to the splendid theme of the story and, secondly, due to the fact that it is considered to be one of the big, all-star, Independent productions of the year. Each of the principal players in Clara K. Young's support is a star in his or her right.

The script calls for two other well-known female and two male artists, whom Abramson will add to the cast within a fortnight.

"One Glorious Night"

Columbia Picture Accorded Big Bookings in Chicago and Cleveland

On Tuesday, February 10, the Chicago newspapers carried an advertisement of one theatre in every section of the city to play "One Glorious Night," the Columbia release featuring Elaine Hammerstein and Al Roscoe.

The theatres mentioned were the Chatham, Ashland, Madison Square and the Hamlin. Such an array of dates in one day leaves no doubt as to the popularity of the picture in that territory.

On the same day in Cleveland "The Midnight Express" played at the Lexington and the Boulevarde; "The Battling Fool" at the National; "Discontented Husbands" at the Penn Square, and "The Marriage Market" at the National.

B. P. Schulberg Announces Productions on New Card

B. P. SCHULBERG Productions will release eighteen features next season according to an announcement just made by B. P. Schulberg who has been in New York for the past ten days conferring with his partner, J. G. Bachmann, Vice-president and general manager of distribution.

This new program will be the largest ever contributed by Mr. Schulberg to a single year's picture output and will contain many important stories adapted from well known stage plays and novels. The announcement promises the independent market a product commensurate with that obtainable from any of the largest producing groups of the industry.

Titles of fourteen of the eighteen have already been announced and contracts for the remaining four will be consummated in a few days. These pictures for which plans are already definite are:

"Shenandoah," the American stage classic of Civil War Days, by Bronson Howard.

"Parisian Love," by F. Oakley Crawford. A fast-action melodrama.

"Horses and Women," a society drama written directly for the screen.

"Exclusive Rights," a story of marriage by Evelyn Campbell.

"Lew Tyler's Wives," a novel of Wallace Irwin.

"The Aristocrat," by Larry Evans, a magazine serial.

"The Worst Woman," a screen original by Larry Evans.

"Open That Door," by Ewart Adamson, a drama of the type of "Bought and Paid For."

"The Romance of a Million Dollars," a current novel by Elizabeth Dejeans.

"Shopworn," by Patricia Wetherill, a tale of "Bought and Paid For."

"Eden's Fruit," an original screen story of modern society.

"The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," by Marie B. Wentworth James. A best seller in England, soon to be published here.

"Dancing Days," from the story by J. J. Bell.

"The Other Woman's Story," by Peggy Gaddis. The corespondent's side of a divorce case.

These stories will be filmed under the direction of Gasnier, James P. Hogan and Frank O'Connor. Mr. Schulberg will announce shortly the name of a fourth director who will soon become affiliated with his organization.

A stock company is being organized to play featured roles in next year's production. Clara Bow, Donald Keith and Alyce Mills are now under contract. In addition, Schulberg casts for 1925-26 will comprise the biggest box-office names free-lancing or under contract to other organizations.

Mr. Schulberg has returned to the coast where he will begin work on "Faint Perfume," "My Lady's Lips" and "When A Woman Reaches Forty"—the three releases which will complete his present season's schedule.

The first four pictures for fall release will be put in preparation immediately following the completion of this year's features.

"Barriers Burned Away" Pleases Chicago Critics

ASSOCIATED Exhibitors' latest feature Fred Niblo's "Thy Name Is Woman." adapted from a story based on the great Chicago fire. Naturally, Chicago was the first city considered in the matter of a world premiere, and every critic who reviewed the picture at its opening last week at the Randolph theatre declared it to be a winner.

The story is that of the novel and stage play written by E. P. Roe. The drama is woven around the Chicago fire of '71, which was started when a cow over-turned a lamp in a barn. It meant to Chicago what the great earthquake of 1906 meant to San Francisco. It required the rebuilding of a city that today has grown to be the second largest in the United States.

Under the direction of S. Barrett McCormack, who was sent on from New York to handle the exploitation of the premiere showing the picture opened to packed houses.

Under the heading, "All Chicago Will Enjoy This Picture," Mae Tinee, motion picture critic of the Chicago Tribune, wrote:

"'Barriers Burned Away' is from the old story by E. P. Roe. With its vivid presentation of the Chicago fire, its introduction of people whose names are familiar to all of us, its quaint and authentic costuming and hairdress, the film is an unusual and interesting one."

Rob Reel, in the Chicago Evening American, stated:

"'Barriers Burned Away' might have been made for Chicago.

"Although, of course, it was produced with a much wider audience in mind, it nevertheless is of particular interest to this city's movie fans because of its identification with Chicago through its characters and background.

"A capable cast puts the story before you. Frank Mayo and Mabel Ballin fit nicely in the leading roles. And Tom Santschi is capital as the political boss, acting the part with just the right cock-sureness."

The review carried by the Evening Post and written by Genevieve Harris declared the picture "well worth seeing." Miss Harris' review follows:

"'Barriers Burned Away' is a curious sort of picture, with a charm all its own. It gives one a more vivid sense of stepping into the past than does the average 'costume' or historical production, possibly because this history is near enough so that we learned it not only from books but from stories of our elders.

"'Barriers Burned Away' is a picture well worth seeing. If you are complaining that 'all movies are alike'—and we have been having a good deal of monotony in our film fare lately—I can recommend this to you as indeed 'something different'."

Ten M.-G.-M. Films Among Forty Best

Of the forty best pictures of 1924, selected by "Film Progress," issued by the National Committee For Better Films, associated with the National Board of Review, ten were Metro-Goldwyn pictures. This was more than any other company had represented on the list.

The Metro-Goldwyn pictures that ranked with the forty best were Rex Ingram's "The Arab," Tom Terriss' "The Bandolero," Erich von Stroheim's "Greed," Victor Seastrom's "He Who Gets Slapped," Marion Davies' "Janice Meredith" and "Yolanda," Lillian Gish's "Romola," Buster Keaton's "Sherlock Junior," Marshall Neilan's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and Fred Niblo's "Thy Name Is Woman."

Two other leading film companies were represented on the list by seven pictures each.

Busy Little "Buddy"

Little Buddy Harris, the three-year-old "find," whose work in Vitagraph's "School For Wives," with Conway Tearle, created much favorable comment, will be featured in the Ivan Abramson production, "Lying Wives," which has just been completed and is now in the process of being assembled.

"Idaho," Patheserial, Heads Releases for Coming Week

IN addition to its regular releases of Mack Sennett and Hal Roach comedies and other short subjects, the week of March 1st marks the starting of the much heralded Pathe serial "Idaho."

"Idaho" is an entirely new departure in the way of serial screen entertainment. The plot is woven around the early gold rush days when the Territory of Idaho covered what are now the states of Nevada, Idaho and Wyoming. The story is an adaptation of the Theodore Burrell story, "The Girl Vigilante" and concerns the struggle of the early prospectors to bring law and order in a country over-run with lawlessness. The serial was produced by C. W. Patton under the direction of Robert F. Hill from a scenario by Frank Leon Smith. Mahlon Hamilton and Vivian Rich head the cast consisting of some of the best-known screen names. The supporting cast of "Idaho" consists in part of W. T. Quinn, Roy E. Bassett, Fred De Silva, Omar Whitehead, N. McDowell, Wm. Dale, Lillian Gale, Gus Seville, George Burton, Frank Lackteen, Charles Brinley and Robert Irwin.

Hal Roach has two comedies scheduled for release by Pathe for the week. The first of these is a Glenn Tryon two-reel comedy entitled "The Haunted Honeymoon." Blanche Mehaffey is the principal supporting artist in this production which is strongly cast with a line-up of screen names consisting of James Finlayson, Yorke Sherwood, George Rowe, Helen Gilmore and Jules Mendel. The plot of the picture is all that the title implies. On the night of their honeymoon, the hero and heroine take shelter in what they believe to be a haunted house, and the first night of their married life proves an exciting one. The picture was directed by Fred L. Guiol under the supervision of F. Richard Jones.

"Plain and Fancy Girls," featuring Charley Chase, is the second Hal Roach release. In this one-reel comedy, Charley Chase is supported by Martha Sleeper, Katherine Grant and S. J. "Tiney" Sandford under the direction of Leo McCarey.

Mack Sennett is also offering two subjects on the Pathe program for the week. They are both two-reelers with one featuring Harry Langdon and the other with Ben Turpin in the leading role. In the Langdon comedy, "His Marriage Wow," this leading screen comedian, assisted by Natalie Kingson, William McCall and Vernon Dent, produces some of the best screen comedy of his career. The story is by Arthur Ripley and opens at the church. Langdon as the unwilling groom almost succeeds in squirming out of the marriage knot but is too carefully watched by the bride and her father. Harry Edwards directed the production.

In the Mack Sennett-Ben Turpin comedy one of the principal comedy situations is based on the cross-eyed comedians appearance as a concert singer. The title of the picture is "The Raspberry Romance." The supporting cast is headed by Blanche Payson, Jack Cooper, Leo Sulky and Madeline Hurlock. Lloyd Bacon is the director.

"Clean-up Week" is the title of the animated cartoon comedy, Aesop's Film Fables. Paul Terry's cartoon zoo follows, with many laughs, the rules set down for the first week in May. Housecleaning is the vogue, and the animated characters succeed in cleaning up everything in sight.

The leading subject of Pathe Review No. 9, is the second installment of "The Prettiest Girl I Know" series. In this installment several well-known directors select those they think are the prettiest girls on the screen. The other subjects on the Review are: "Keeping Faith With Fuji," a pilgrimage up the sacred mountain of Japan, and a "Pathecolor" of views of the old Spanish city of Toledo, "The Stronghold of the Moors."

Pathe News Nos. 20 and 21, and "Topics of the Day," No. 9, completes the program for the week.

Universal Announces List of 24 1925-26 Productions

AMONG the twenty-four 1925-1926 productions, announced by Universal Pictures Company, the following may be mentioned, many of them already completed.

Ten features are being scheduled and will go into production within a few weeks' time.

Samuel Hopkins Adams' "Siege" which ran serially in Collier's and is now enjoying a wide sale as a Harper's book, will doubtless start the screen. It stars Virginia Valli and a large imposing cast under the direction of Svend Gade. This production has been finished.

Virginia Valli will also be starred in "Peacock Feathers" by Temple Bailey, which is nearing completion under the direction of King Baggot.

Miss Valli may also star in "The Home Maker," by Dorothy Canfield, which Universal has just finished.

Reginald Denny will be starred in "California Straight Ahead," an unusual automobile story by Byron Morgan, already completed and ready for release. Other productions for Denny include "Where Was I?" by Edgar Franklin, and "This Way Out" by Frederick Isham.

Laura La Plante will be co-starred with Eugene O'Brien in one of the "Winnie O'Wynne" series by Bertram Atkey; and "Doubling for Cupid," by Nina Wilcox Putnam.

House Peters will be seen in "The Titans," by Charles Guernon; and in "The Still Alarm" by Joseph Arthur and A. C. Wheeler.

Among the special productions will be Rex Beach's "The Goose Woman," which Clarence Brown is completing with a cast including Constance Bennett, Jack Pickford and Louise Dresser.

Another will be "The Last Laugh," which enjoyed such tremendous vogue at the New York Rivoli and Rialto, and is now playing at the Cameo in New York. This Emil Jannings production has been acclaimed one of the most novel, interesting and enjoyable pictures ever produced.

"Lorraine of the Lions," a special production written by Isadore Bernstein, will star Norman Kerry under the direction of Edward Sedgwick. The cast includes Patsy Ruth Miller, Philo McCullough and Joseph J. Dowling.

Larry Trimble has been engaged to make a special production of Albert Chevalier's song and play, "My Old Dutch." It will be an elaborate feature.

"Once a Peddler," starring Glenn Hunter, is being directed by William Nigh for the 1926 schedule.

Nellie Revell is writing a circus story called "Spangles" for a big Universal circus production, and Ellis Parker Butler a comedy-drama entitled "Advice to the Love-Lorn."

Hoot Gibson will be seen in William MacLeod Raine's novel "A Daughter of the Dons," and Max Brand's story "Dark Rosaleen."

The Mary Philbin-Norman Kerry combination is scheduled to do "Folle Farine" by Ouida; and "The Prince," an original story by Howard Higgin.

CARMELITA GERAGHTY

"Friendly Enemies" Off

Weber and Fields, Their Film Work Over, Jump To 'Frisco

Joe Weber and Lew Fields, world-famous stage stars, bade temporary adieux to Hollywood this week after completing their work in "Friendly Enemies," under George Melford's direction, and have resumed their vaudeville tour at San Francisco.

After their appearance in San Francisco the stars will return to Los Angeles in their vaudeville sketch, and if any retakes are necessary in the picture they will be made at that time.

Melford is now busy putting the final retouches on the production, and it is expected that it will be in its final form for presentation by A. H. Sebastian, through Producers Distributing Corporation, within the next two or three weeks.

It was originally intended to road-show this production, accompanied by Weber and Fields, in a personal appearance act, but this plan may be changed in favor of presenting the picture in the three, big, long-run theatres, where the Al. Christie feature, "Charley's Aunt" is now playing.

Fay Wray Signed

New Leading Lady for Glenn Tryon on Hal Roach Lot

One of the principal news events of the week on the Hal Roach lot was the signing of Fay Wray, who has won considerable prominence as a screen beauty of marked type, as leading lady for Glenn Tryon in his latest comedy.

Miss Wray has been in pictures for the past two years and is considered one of the most beautiful and promising girls in the film colony at Hollywood.

She was born in Canada and came to Hollywood three years ago from Salt Lake City. Hal Roach and Roach studio executives predict a fine future for the newcomer, a Philbin type with a face of spiritual character.

Elaine Hammerstein Signed

Will Remain With Columbia For Another Series of Specials

Harry Cohn announces he has signed Elaine Hammerstein for next year's series of Columbia Pictures.

Miss Hammerstein has proved to be very popular with exhibitors all over the country, particularly with audiences covered by the State Right market.

She appeared in four of last year's series of eight Columbia specials. They were: "The Foolish Virgin," "The Midnight Express," "One Glorious Night" and will soon appear in "After Business Hours," with Lou Tellegen.

Metro Film in Demand

Marion Davies' "Janice Meredith" in Demand for Washington's Birthday

Marion Davies' Cosmopolitan production of "Janice Meredith," a Metro-Goldwyn picture, is in demand by exhibitors for Washington's birthday. The patriotic subject of the story, dealing with the American Revolution and numbering George Washington among its celebrated characters, is particularly appropriate for the national holiday on February 22.

Hundreds of theatre owners will exhibit "Janice Meredith" on Washington's birthday, as the tie-up is of such a nature that it is counted upon to pack theatres on Washington's birthday.

Enthusiasm for "Janice Meredith" as a special holiday attraction is especially marked in view of the sensational success the picture is meeting with throughout the country.

Three-Year-Old Boy "Find"

Buddy Harris, a blonde Will Rogers of three, who recently finished the important child-role in Victor Halperin's "School For Wives," has signed another contract with Ivan Abramson to appear in "Lying Wives," in which Madge Kennedy, Clara Kimball Young and Richard Bennett are featured. Work is being filmed at the Tec Art Studios in New York City.

"Man and Maid"

Final scenes are to be shot this week on Elinor Glyn's third screen production. This is a picturization of her novel, "Man and Maid" and will be presented by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Mary Pickford Defers "Art;" Will Revive "Money Pictures"

"LITTLE ANNIE ROONEY" is to be Mary Pickford's next screen story. This announcement answers the question the public has been asking for a long time: "What type of pictures will Mary do now?"

Mary will play the saucy, mischievious girl that she made famous. This character is Mary's forte, and she will again romp through her scenes as a golden-haired imp of the alleys, but in the most modern, up-to-date stories.

"Little Annie Rooney" will glorify the great American 5-and-10-cent store. This is a field of American endeavor that has not yet been immortalized in celluloid. It presents an ideal locale for Mary, who plays a carefree, Irish-American girl.

Jack Cunningham, who has just completed writing "Don Q" for Douglas Fairbanks, is writing "Little Annie Rooney" for Miss Pickford. William Beaudine will direct the picture, having been loaned for the production by Warner Brothers, with whom he is under contract. John Schulze is art director and E. deB. Newman, general manager for the Mary Pickford Company, is in charge of the production activities.

Miss Pickford has not appeared before the camera for over a year. Much of that time was spent in a trip to Europe. She is elated with her new story, and eagerly looking forward to the start of production, early in March.

Thus Mary will forsake costume dramas and fairy tales for the story of modern American life, in which she plays an Irish-American rascal with curls and a twinkle in her eye.

Casting for the new picture will start soon. An entire 5-and-10-cent store, stock and all, will be used on the Pickford lot, as "Annie" is a clerk in this store, and much of the activity of the picture surrounds it. It is expected that Mary will employ a "ripping" cast.

"Charley's Aunt" a Hit in Chicago and Los Angeles

IN accord with the laudatory opinions expressed by the New York newspaper critics, Al Christie's big feature, "Charley's Aunt," has received the finest kind of a reception at the hands of the Los Angeles and Chicago critics who viewed it at the premiere in the Chicago Orpheum and the Million Dollar Theatre, in Los Angeles, where it is now on an indefinite run.

The Los Angeles critics said:

"'Charley's Aunt,' a fun-riot on the stage for three decades now, promises to make life blithsome and gay for the present generation. It kept a crowded audience in convulsions of laughter at the Million Dollar Theatre."—Los Angeles Examiner.

"One of the heartiest laughs this critic has enjoyed for months was originated and then kept in motion by 'Charley's Aunt' which had its premiere at the Million Dollar Theatre yesterday."—Los Angeles Herald.

"Extra braces should be attached to the seats during the engagement of 'Charley's Aunt.' The building is given a good laughter-shaking at each performance."—Los Angeles Express.

"Here is the comedy de luxe of the current season. It will without the least doubt bring an excess of joy and delight to a new host of people."—Los Angeles Times.

"The laughing apparatus of this critic, thought permanently out of order, is in tip-top shape again and working on all six. There has never been a comedy produced in which so much clean and honest humor abounds.—Los Angeles Daily News.

In Chicago, the acclaim of the critics is expressed in the following excerpts:

"'Charley's Aunt' is without any shadow of doubt one of the funniest things ever done on the screen."—Chicago Daily News.

"The folks watching the comedy at the Orpheum were even funnier than the comedy in their unrestrained primitive demonstrations of enjoyment."—Chicago Tribune.

"Syd Chaplin had them laughing at the Orpheum yesterday, and it wasn't because he carries the name of the world's greatest comedian, either. He is a real hit in this film-farce."—Herald Examiner.

"'Charley's Aunt' contrived to keep the Orpheum, as laughter filled, as during the days when Harold Lloyd's funmaking was displayed there. It sweeps the audience into gales of laughter."—Chicago Evening Post.

"If you are from Missouri, stand in front of the Orpheum, where 'Charley's Aunt' is on view, and harken to the crows crowing."—Chicago Daily Journal.

Indianapolis Display on Short Subjects a Novelty

ONE of the most elaborate window displays ever engineered on short subjects has been put over in Indianapolis by the Educational Film Exchange of that city, of which H. C. Dressendorfer is manager.

The Indiana Bell Telephone Company devotes one of its great display windows to showings arranged generally with the local manufacturers. While motion pictures have not in the past been considered as coming within the range set for these window displays, Mr. Dressendorfer was able to show the Bell officials that high quality motion picture comedies, such as those released by Educational, played such a large part in the lives of the Indiana public that a display, showing the principal stars in Educational Pictures, would be of unusual interest.

Photographs of these comedy players, many of them showing the use of the telephone, together with studio pictures and photographs of E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, at his office telephone, were arranged in a spectacular display in which the theatres showing Educational Pictures figured very largely through a great chart listing all such theatres in Indianapolis.

A series of cards indicated briefly the important part which the telephone plays in the motion picture industry.

Preceding the Bell Telephone exhibit, the photographs were displayed for a week in a big window in the Merchants Heat & Light Co. building, at Meridian and Washington Streets, the most prominent corner in Indianapolis. This corner is known as the "daylight corner," because of the blaze of lights which keep it a brilliant spot until midnight.

Indianapolis exhibitors have hastened to express their appreciation of this fine short subjects exploitation stunt and theatres throughout the Indianapolis territory had flooded the Educational Exchange with requests for the display within a few days after it made its appearance.

The Bell Telephone Company is giving this stunt and Educational Pictures much additional publicity through stories and pictures in its house organ.

Evelyn Pierce a Baby Star

Evelyn Pierce, signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer a few months ago, has been chosen by the Wampas as one of the Baby Stars for 1925. Miss Pierce played a minor role in Rupert Hughes' "Excuse Me." She has been in pictures a little over six months.

Closes After Record Run

The Broadway engagement of "The Ten Commandments," which comes to an end this week, deserves the attention of every showman because its 62 capacity weeks breaks all records.

Only the contractual necessity of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to turn over the Criterion Theatre to representatives of the French government is responsible for the termination of the engagement of "The Ten Commandments" at this time. New box office records have been made during the last three weeks of the engagement. The biggest day's business was on the 59th Saturday, when the box office intake was $22 more than on the 58th Saturday, which established a previous high record for the house. The box office figures for the 61st week of the picture was $9,621.

"Big Names—Little Comedies," Discussed by E. W. Hammons

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has returned from his mid-winter vacation at Daytona Beach, Fla.

During his vacation, Mr. Hammons investigated exhibiting conditions in the South and finds that the short subject is gaining in popularity in that section.

"Exhibitors are realizing the box-office value of short subjects more and more every day," said Mr. Hammons on his return to New York. "For years the one and two-reel comedies were regarded as 'fillers' bought to fill out an otherwise too-short program. Since Educational has entered the field with its program of quality comedies, real showmen have not been slow to see that entertainment value is also box-office value and every year there are more and more exhibitors converted to the policy of advertising the short subjects and giving it an even break in their lobby display.

"Comedies such as the Hamilton, Semon, and Hiers two-reelers on the Educational program have proved excellent exploitation pictures, too," continued Mr. Hammons. "These big names in short comedies are every bit as valuable as they are in feature productions and the exhibitors who advertise them are reaping all the benefits of a double feature bill without the drawback of loading up their programs with ten or twelve reels with subsequent overlong show.

"The day is surely coming when every exhibitor will regard his two-reel comedy as an entertainment and exploitation asset which he cannot afford to overlook.

"Exhibitors and producers both are too easily impressed with the footage of a picture and often disregard the entertainment value. Few comedies are successful in the longer lengths, but in the one and two reel form they are condensed entertainment—and the patron gets as much 'kick' from them as he would from six or seven reels of slower and less entertaining material."

"The Thundering Herd" Is Big Picture of Days of Old West

IT is the belief of the critics who have previewed the Paramount production of "The Thundering Herd" that it is the greatest Zane Grey production ever made. A certain famous showman who viewed the picture at its first screening said that it would surpass the business of "North of 36."

There is much real production evidenced in the making of this picture to classify it as a "western," but if it belongs in that classification, by necessity, the same critics have supported the opinion of the officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that it is the greatest picture of the Old West that has ever been made.

One of the factors responsible for the excellence of this production is the contract between Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the author which permits Zane Grey the privilege of selecting the locations in which his stories are to be filmed.

Another factor of equal importance in this production is the cast featuring Lois Wilson, Jack Holt and Noah Beery. In point of novelty, however, "The Thundering Herd" stands alone as the first production ever made in which two thousand head of buffalo are sent into action at a critical point of the story.

William K. Howard, who produced "The Thundering Herd," has been praised for his effort in the direction of the picture. But it is known to very few that one of his most difficult problems, aside from the buffalos, was making mobile a unit of one thousand Arapahoe Indians, and a huge technical staff in order to make the circuit of five large location camps which had been prepared in advance. All the locations selected by the author were far off the regular railroad lines, and called for altitude in order to get the prescribed backgrounds.

To showmen looking for new methods of picture exploitation "The Thundering Herd" is a gold mine of ideas. Paramount's national field force of exploiteers, under the direction of Claud Saunders, has viewed the picture, and each of the exploiteers is equipped with a portfolio representing some of the most unusual ideas that have been produced lately by that able group of showmen.

King Vidor has taken his "Proud Flesh" company back to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Culver City studios from a location trip to San Francisco and Del Monte, and is preparing to film the earthquake scenes of the production.

Universal Now Releasing "Secrets of the Night"

"SECRETS of the Night" an all-star Universal Jewel and one of the pictures in Carl Laemmle's White List, is announced for release this week through all Universal Exchanges.

This is the picture adapted from the popular stage success "The Nightcap" written by Guy Bolton and Max Marcin. It is a mystery melodrama with strong comedy relief. As a play it was one of the thrillers of the season. Universal has enlarged upon its thrill power and high-lighted the comedy parts.

An unusually strong cast was chosen for the picture. Headed by James Kirkwood and Madge Bellamy, it includes Zasu Pitts, Tom Wilson, Rosemary Theby, Tom Ricketts, Tom S. Guise, Stewart Hull, Edward Cecil, Frederick Cole, Joseph Singleton, Tyrone Brereton, Otto Hoffman, Arthur Thalasso and Anton Vaverka.

Herbert Blache directed. He was selected to do the picture by the studio executives at Universal City because of his special success in the past with mystery stories. The play was adapted by Edward J. Montague, and between Blache and Montague, the plot and thrill sequences have been deftly treated. The comedy situations have been enlarged upon with skill, so that the picture is a pleasing mixture of suspense and hilarity.

Weiss' New Press Books

New Campaign For Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt 1925 Series

Preparatory to the issuance of their new 1925 series of five reel action features, starring Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt, Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation is preparing two complete campaign books containing full publicity, advertising and exploitation data on both these popular ridin' stars.

The new books, which are being prepared by Merritt Crawford, director of publicity for Artclass Pictures, will be each of ten pages of full newspaper dimensions, 15 inches by 22 inches, printed in two colors.

The covers will be of novel and attractive design and will show Buffalo Bill, Jr. and Buddy Roosevelt in one of the many thrilling stunts which has made them so popular on the screen during the current season.

Much special advertising material is also being prepared on both these Artclass stars, who during the past season have established themselves strongly in the favor of picture-goers everywhere, and this will be contained in the forthcoming campaign books. Louis Weiss, managing executive of Artclass Pictures, is planning many novel aids for the exhibitors booking the series, designed to make Buffalo Bill, Jr. and Buddy Roosevelt the leading box office attraction-stars in their particular field.

No expense is being spared in the new seris, it is said, so that the productions will more than warrant the increased overhead expense of the advertising and publicity campaign, as now planned.

To Star in "Peacock Feathers"

After a brief vacation in Chicago where she is visiting her mother, Virginia Valli will return to Universal City to begin work in her next starring vehicle, "Peacock Feathers," adapted from Temple Bailey's novel.

It is possible that the company will go to New Orleans, the locale of the story, for the purpose of filming some of the scenes of the annual Mardi Gras festival. The production will be under the direction of King Baggot.

New Century Comedy

Century announces that it has a burlesque on "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in the making. The two-reeler is called "Uncle Tom's Gal." Edna Marian is the star.

The comedy includes all the melodramatic incidents of the old thriller, but done in a funny way. William Watson is directing it, and Larry Richardson and Les Bates are in the cast.

Dorothy Devore and Matt Moore in Warner Brothers' "The Narrow Street," which so captivated New York City it was held over two weeks at the Piccadilly.

Pick Cast for Charmer

Many Prominent Players Selected for Pola Negri's Next Production

Every member of the cast selected to support Pola Negri in "The Charmer," her first Paramount production in the Second Famous Forty is a performer with a good history of motion picture acting. They form one of the best supporting casts that Miss Negri has had since she has become a Paramount star.

Those who have been signed, according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players in charge of production, are, Robert Frazer, who will play opposite Miss Negri, Gertrude Astor, Trixie Friganza, Wallace MacDonald and Edward Davis.

"The Charmer" will be billed as a Sidney Olcott Production, and will be released in April.

The story was adapted by Sada Cowan from the famous novel "Mariposa" by Henry Baerlein.

New Title Chosen

"The Sociel Exile" is the title that First National has chosen for its new Corinne Griffith production, now being made from Zoe Atkins' stage success, "Declasse," by Director Robert Vignola.

Photography will, in all probability, be completed upon this production by the end of the week, and Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc., will then begin active preparations for the filming of "The National Anthem," the Hartley Manners play in which Laurette Taylor starred on the stage.

Flora Finch with De Mille

Flora Finch, the well known comedienne, will have an important role in the William De Mille production of "Men and Women." The part is that of Kate, a newly rich cousin from Kansas who goes to New York to look over the town and they buy it. It calls for the most fashionable clothes of the flapper type ever worn by an elderly woman. Richard Dix, Clair Adams, Neil Hamilton and Robert Edeson are featured in the production.

Artist Designing Posters

Herman F. Jans has commissioned Domingo F. M. Periconi, noted poster artist, to prepare the paper for his latest independent production, "The Mad Dancer." There will be a twenty-four sheet, a six sheet, two 3 sheets and two 1 sheets.

Metro-Goldwyn Innovation Helps Put Pictures Over

METRO-GOLDWYN, it appears, has hit upon one of the best fan publicity stunts that end of the industry has seen. A few months ago J. E. D. Meador of Metro-Goldwyn inaugurated a special Woman's Page Service, edited by a newspaper woman. It was an innovation in national publicity, and more the nature of an experiment, as it was a newspaper service prepared entirely apart from the Metro-Goldwyn "Picture News." It was sent to a mailing list of society and woman's page editors exclusively.

The service has proved so popular that it is extensively used, not only by metropolitan newspapers, including New York dailies, but by small papers scattered throughout the country.

An instance of the effectiveness of the new Woman's Page Service instituted by Metro-Goldwyn is a letter received from Will C. Logan, editor and publisher of The Goodland Herald of Goodland, Indiana, which is similar to editors' approval of the service in scores of other localities.

"I believe the service is taking with the ladies," Mr. Logan wrote. "I am going to make a regular front page feature of it each week. Now our movie man says that he has booked several Metro-Goldwyn features for next month."

The editor added that the domestic science class of the Goodland high school, of which his daughter is a member, made use of many of the photographs supplied with Metro-Goldwyn's Woman's Page Service.

This service is of particular value to exhibitors of Metro-Goldwyn pictures, as it is aimed exclusively at the women readers of newspapers who form the large part of motion picture audiences.

Newest Century Comedy

"The Aggravatin' Kid," a two-reeler with Hilliard Karr and Buddy Messinger in the leading roles, is the current Century Comedy release through all Universal exchanges.

The great sea battle scene in William Fox's screen version of "The Man Without a Country."

"Dressmaker From Paris" Great In "Woman Appeal"

THE greatest "woman appeal" picture ever produced is "The Dressmaker From Paris," in the opinion of the production officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Although one of the big features of this picture will be the costumes worn by the Fourteen Famous International Beauty Models, the production is equipped with a strong box-office cast headed by Leatrice Joy, who makes a triumphant return to the screen; Ernest Torrence, Mildred Harris and Alan Forrest.

The story is fast moving, highly original screen material, and begins with a romance in Paris between Leatrice Joy and Alan Forrest as an officer in the A. E. F. Forrest is called to the front, and doesn't meet the girl he fell in love with in Paris until early in the spring of 1925, in a small middle west town where he has become junior partner to Ernest Torrence in the ownership of the Emporium Department Store.

Torrence is a pillar of the church and very reactionary in his business methods. Forrest is the "go-getter" of the firm. He brings to the Emporium for a fashion show Madame Louise who has just staged a successful style show in Chicago. Madame Louise, Forrest finds, is his sweetheart from France. But now she has manufactured a very dazzling reputation through her ambitious press agent, and the reunion only brings about a misunderstanding.

The fashion show goes on, and the town is shocked. The fourteen beautiful young models exhibit clothes and lingerie of the latest Paris modes which are years ahead of the current styles in this small old-fashioned little town. Torrence gets in bad with all his good churchgoing friends, and in trying to shield his daughter, Mildred Harris, from a roadhouse scandal, Madame Louise only makes her own reputation worse. The development of the story from this point on shows excellent treatment of a good situation.

With the engagement of Travis Banton, Paris style creator, to come to the United States and design the gowns to be worn by the Fourteen Famous International Beauty Models, it is expected that this Paramount March release will form the manual of women's styles for the next year to come. Attention will be given not only to gowns, shoes and millinery, but to the more intimate articles of feminine wearing apparel.

As production nears completion the plans for its exploitation have been perfected by the Paramount home office advertising and publicity departments. One feature of the exploitation campaign for "The Dressmaker from Paris" is a special de luxe style trailer which will show a half dozen of the beautiful models in the gowns which they wear in the picture. This trailer will be about a single reel in length and will be titled by the designer of the gowns. In the hands of the Paramount exploiteers this special trailer is expected to open many new avenues for department store tie-ups and style shows in the theatres showing the picture.

Another important unit in the national campaign is the style book, which will have twelve pages and in appearance and authority will be on a par with the most fashionable style magazines published. All the illustrations have been made from the original drawings by the designer, Travis Banton, and are reproduced in four colors. However, in order to popularize the style book, by bringing each of the creations shown in the picture within the means of every housewife in the country, supplementary drawings have been included by that well known designer of practical clothes for women, Vyvyan Donner, who shows how it is possible to make every one of the gowns worn in the production, with different materials, at about a seventy-five per cent saving. These books will be available in every Paramount exchange at least two weeks before production.

Owing to the unusual story value of having fourteen girls from all over the world as models, coupled with the fact that there is an unlimited field for news stories in the making of this production, newspapers throughout the country have given unusual attention to this picture.

Working on the basis that women will never stop talking about the picture once they see it, the main effort of Paramount's campaign is to reach the women, and exhibitors will be urged to follow suit.

Pathe News Prompt

Has Floyd Collins Funeral Pictures on Broadway in Record Time

What is considered one of the most remarkable accomplishments in the history of photo news service is credited to the Pathe News, the pictorial semi-weekly news reel, when at considerable expense photos of the Floyd Collins funeral at Cave City, Kentucky, were rushed to New York in time to catch this morning's (February 19) editions of newspapers. But what is considered more marvelous was that the Pathe organizations on Broadway last night.

The services were held at noon at the spot where Collins met his untimely death. Pathe News had made prior arrangements to cover the event pictorially.

Warners Sign Lowell Sherman

Warner Bros. made another addition to their Hollywood stock company when they signed Lowell Sherman, now playing in "High Stakes" in Chicago. The deal was consummated by Jack Warner on his way west, who stopped off long enough to get Mr. Sherman's signature.

The actor will report at Warner Bros.' studio at the end of the present theatrical season and will start work in his first picture early in June. It is the intention of Warner Bros. to star him in several of the novels they have purchased for next season's classics.

Fazenda Signed by Paramount

Louise Fazenda, considered one of the best known comediennes on the screen, has been signed for an important part in "The Night Club" according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production.

Fazenda's role in this production is that of a Spanish dancer who loves men only when they are angry, and she will be featured in the billing together with Raymond Griffith, Vera Reynolds, and Wallace Beery.

Frank Urson and Paul Iribe are directing.

Meighan to Start New Film Soon

While Thomas Meighan is enjoying a brief rest at Miami, Victor Heerman and Tom Geraghty, director and scenarist, are in Atlantic City completing the script for "Old Home Week" which Meighan will begin to produce in Florida. Following the making of the exterior scenes there, the unit will return to the Paramount Long Island studio for interiors. No announcements have been made about the supporting cast.

Jane Jennings Signed

Jane Jennings, known as the "Cameo Mother of the Screen," who recently was seen with Richard Dix in "A Man Must Live," has just been re-engaged by Famous Players for Herbert Brenon's production, "The Little French Girl." "The Little French Girl" cast will leave for Cuba shortly on exteriors.

"The Fighting Parson"

J. J. Fleming has advised the Davis Distributing Division, Inc., that he has started production on the Al Ferguson picture, "The Fighting Parson," in which the star will be supported by the prize winner of the Northwest prize beauty contest just completed by Jensen and Von Herberg, of the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Oregon.

This production will be the first all-Northwest screen drama, as it will be made at the Fleming Studios, Beaverton, Ore., and will feature the leading beauty of that prolific section of the United States.

"The Perfect Cast" in "Are Parents People?"

Those familiar with Alice Duer Miller's story, "Are Parents People?" will recognize that the perfect cast has been achieved with the selection of Florence Vidor, Betty Bronson, and Adolphe Menjou for the three principal roles in this production. This was the expressed opinion of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production in the announcement that Vidor, Bronson, and Menjou would have the main roles.

According to advance advertising announcements now being prepared by the Paramount advertising and publicity departments it is evident that the slogan "The Perfect Cast" will form a part of the regular billing for the picture, as it is believed by Paramount home office officials that it would be impossible to find three players more suited to the particular requirements of the story.

The production will be directed by Mal St. Claire from the screen adaptation made by Frances Agnew.

Exclusive Program Planned by Weiss Brothers Next Spring

WEISS BROTHERS' Artclass Pictures Corporation are planning for an extensive program during 1925, according to an announcement by Louis Weiss, vice-president and general manager of that progressive organization, no less than thirty-eight multiple reel features being included in their release schedule for the coming season, in addition to a number of short length series and novelties of various kinds.

Of this number, no less than twenty-four will be western action stunt five-reel features, six will be high class society melodramas and ten will be specials of various kinds, ranging from big, multiple reel, spectacular and historical productions to novelty comedy dramas and detective stories of standard five or six reel length.

Arrangements have already been made with Lester F. Scott, Jr., to produce the westerns, two of the series to feature Artclass' present stars, Buddy Roosevelt and Buffalo Bill, Jr., while the third series will star a new boy, who has figured in many action pictures in featured roles, but whose name is not yet disclosed, as he is now completing a contract for another company.

A novel angle of this third series of western features, and one that will be of very great advantage to the exhibitors booking the series, in exploiting each individual picture, will be the fact that an actress of stellar dimensions, whose name will be a real box office magnet, will be engaged to play opposite the star in each picture, a different girl being selected for each feature of the series.

More elaborate stories have also been selected for Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt, the popular young stars who have won such a notable following among picture fans during the past season, and these will be produced on a scale commensurate with their increased box office value.

"Speed" and "Daughters Who Pay" Released in March

GEORGE H. DAVIS and Samuel J. Briskin, directing heads of Banner Productions, Inc., announced that studio work has been completed on their next two feaure offerings, "Speed," produced by Ben Verschleiser on the Coast from Grace Sartwell Mason's Saturday Evening Post story and "Daughters Who Pay," Banner's Eastern production which has been in work at the Whitman Bennett studio in Yonkers, under the direction of George Terwilliger.

Both pictures have been sent to the laboratory for cutting and titling, according to the Banner officials, and work on them will be pushed as rapidly as possible.

"Speed" is a rural melodrama with an ultra-modern setting and its publication in the Saturday Evening Post last September occasioned considerable comment by reason of the author's unusual treatment of a decidedly novel theme. Competent critics adjudged it one of the best fiction stories appearing during the year.

The production was directed by Edward J. Le Saint, with an exceptional box office cast, headed by Betty Blythe and including Pauline Garon, Robert Ellis, William V. Mong, Arthur Rankin and Eddie Phillips.

"Daughters Who Pay," which was written and scenarized by William B. Laub, also has a notable cast, featuring John Bowers and Marguerite De Motte, with J. Barney Sherry, Alyce Mills, Bela Lugosi, Joseph Striker and Marie Shoffer in support.

Both features are expected to be ready for the exchanges in March.

"The Fast Pace" Completed

Second Wilfred Noy Production for Arrow Is Finished—Prominent Players in Cast

Announcement comes from W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Pictures Corporation, of the completion of the editing and titling of "The Fast Pace," second Wilfred Noy production to be made for Arrow. The story revolves around a band of blackmailers who seek to get possession of several letters written by a frivolous young matron married to a man many years her senior. Mr. Noy has provided a most satisfactory society background, and while his criminals are essentially underworld characters, they are nevertheless of the literate, polished type, rather than the crude gangster so frequently pictured on the screen as the typical crook.

The story is fast in action and maintains its suspense right up to the last smashing climax. Mr. Noy was most fortunate in his selection of the cast, which includes Alice Lake, Niles Welch, J. Barney Sherry, Maurice Costello, Mary Thurman, Louise Carter and other popular screen celebrities. The story is by H. G. Loya.en.

Biblical Picture Popular

Lenten Season Bookings Big on "After Six Days," Reports Weiss Brothers

Weiss Brothers' Artclass Picture Corporation report an unusually large number of bookings on their Biblical feature, "After Six Days" throughout the country. The feature presents in ten reels the principal dramatic episodes of the Old Testament from Adam and Eve in Eden, to the Songs of Solomon, showing in picturesque fashion the Flood, the building of the Tower of Babel, the story of Joseph and His Brethren, the tremendous battle scenes between the Israelites and the Egyptians, the Miracle of the Sed Sea, and the spectacular scenes in King Solomon's palace.

According to Louis Weiss, Artclass Executive, "After Six Days" not only makes a most desirable subject for presentation during the Lenten season, by reason of its theme, which is based wholly upon a Biblical history, but also because its quality as high class screen entertainment is such, that exhibitors who have once handled the picture, frequently rebook it for a later run because of its popular appeal.

Jules Burnstein who is handling "After Six Days" in northern New York State for Weiss Brothers has arranged several dates in his territory, as has Harry Danto, locally, in New York City and Northern New Jersey.

Jack Weil, who holds the "After Six Days" franchise in the St. Louis territory also reports numerous bookings during the Lenten period. In New Orleans Manager J. Eugene Pearce of the Tudor opens with "After Six Days" in Easter Week for an indefinite run, having already played the picture for ten days in January.

"After Business Hours" Cast

Harry Cohn announces that he has signed Phyllis Hover, John Patrick, Otto Hoffman, William Scott and Lee Moran to support Elaine Hammerstein and Lou Tellegen in their forthcoming production which will be released under the title of "After Business Hours."

This present picture will be the last of the eight Columbia Pictures series for 1924-25. It will be the fourth picture this season that Miss Hammerstein will have been featured in. The others were "The Foolish Virgin," "The Midnight Express," and "One Glorious Night."

"Fighting the Flames" Started

Harry Cohn announces that Columbia Pictures have started the actual filming of their seventh Columbia Picture, "Fighting the Flames." Reeves Eason has a very excellent story to work with and it is expected that this picture will be as great a success as the Midnight Express, an earlier picture in the same series.

A very excellent cast has been assembled. It includes William Haines, Dorothy Devore, Frankie Darrow, Charlie Murray, David Torrence, Sheldon Lewis and William Welsh.

The Continuity for this picture was written by Douglas Doty, the direction will be under Reeves Eason.

Screen Children Featured

Announcement has just been made that production has started on a new series of comedies featuring famous children of the screen. The series will comprise six two reel Kid subjects and will be produced by Windsor Pictures Corporation of Hollywood for release through Arrow Pictures Corporation.

W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow, states that the child stars are to be known as the "Arrow Kids" and that the producers already have under contract such well known youngsters as "Peaches" Jackson, Elmo ("Freckles") Billings, Breffni Beggs, Buddy Williams, Albert Schaeffer, Ananias Berry and Warren J. Berry.

Announcement of the name of the new series will be made in the near future.

New York City Reviewers Praise "Pampered Youth"

A UNANIMOUS chorus of praise from New York newspapers greeted Vitagraph's "Pampered Youth" on its world premiere at the Rialto Theatre, on Broadway last week. This David Smith production, adapted from Booth Tarkington's Pulitzer prize winner, "The Magnificent Amberson's," attracted large audiences and aroused great enthusiasm. Extracts from some of the reviews follow:

Harriette Underhill, Herald Tribune: "An exceedingly enjoyable picture, adhering strictly to the original story. Booth Tarkington's charming tale. Seldom have we seen such a satisfactory translation. And the titles are perfect. Ben Alexander and Cullen Landis are excellent. Alice Calhoun plays the mother and she is better and prettier than we ever saw her before. Allan Forrest is good too. 'Pampered Youth' is one of the best pictures Vitagraph has ever made. Don't miss it."

Dorothy Herzog, Daily Mirror: "The story moves smoothly until the end, when a fire scene is staged that thrills to the very core. You'll get a kick out of this—guaranteed."

Louella O. Parsons, American: "The performance of Cullen Landis, is as it should be. I liked Allan Forrest very much. Ben Alexander does very good work and Alice Calhoun is sweet and appealing."

Evening Post: "One of the few really intelligently handled things hereabouts. It is finely acted. The costuming might have been overdone, but isn't. The sub-titles do what a sub-title should do—allow for the omission of thousands of feet of dull action. The cast is far above the average and there is less overacting than in thousands of its contemporaries.

Frank Vreeland, Telegram and Evening Mail: A good, conscientious reproduction of a fine novel. There is a good, old-fashioned rousing finish of the four-alarm order, an uncommonly good fire scene. Cullen Landis does a thankless role gracefully and Ben Alexander is effective."

George Gerhard, Evening World: "The picture is excellently done. Much of the appeal is the result of the work of Cullen Landis. His performance is one of the best he has ever done, and Alice Calhoun is nearly as good as he. The supporting cast also is splendid. I liked this picture."

Mordaunt Hall, New York Times: "David Smith has brought forth a decidedly engaging entertainment. The sub-titles are unusually good. There is an excellent fire sequence with a realistic blaze and an exciting rescue. The makeup of the faces of the players in the picture has been carefully supervised and the settings are faithful to the idea. Those who are interested in the book will find much to praise."

"In His Arms," Lynn Starling's dramatic success produced on Broadway this season, has been bought by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company.

Rex Ingram's "Mare Nostrum" To Be His Biggest Picture

REX INGRAM, now abroad producing "Mare Nostrum" from Blasco Ibanez's novel, in France and Spain, has sent the first announcement to this country of the full cast of the elaborate production. "Mare Nostrum" will be Ingram's biggest picture for release by Metro-Goldwyn.

The cast is composed for the most part of names foreign to American pictures, except the leading players, Alice Terry and Antonio Moreno, and several in the supporting cast such as Millie Impolito and Hughie Mack.

Miss Terry has the role of Freya, with Mr. Moreno appearing as Captain Ulysses Ferragut. The ward adopted by Mr. Ingram and Miss Terry when they were in Algiers wife, Dona Cinta; Michael Brantford as Kada-Abd-El-Kader, plays Ulysses in the prologue of the picture. The Arab boy is now abroad with Ingram, with Miss Terry expected soon.

Others in the cast are Kithnou as Ulysses' wife, Dona Cinta; Michael Brantford as their son, Esteban; Rosita Ramirez as their niece, Pepita; Michael Floresco as Ricardo Blanes; Marcel Lesieur as the professor, Don Pedro; Frederick Mariotti as Toni, the mate; Frau Paquerette as Doctor Fedelman; Fernand Mailly as von Kramer; Leon Menczel as Karl; John George as Tafalla Pinas; Millie Impolito as Melilla, and Hughie Mack as Uncle Caragol.

In the prologue appear Uni Apollon as the Triton; Alex Nova as Don Esteban Ferragut; Maria Varani as the wife, Dona Cristina; besides Kada-Abd-El-Kader.

Ingram has begun shooting "Mare Nostrum," making exteriors near Mentome, the home of Blasco Ibanez, in Southern France. Willis Goldbeck adapted the Ibanez novel to the screen.

EDMUND LOWE

Fox star who will shortly start work on his next picture, "The Best Man."

Fox West Coast Studios Clear Way for New Films

PRODUCTION at Fox Film Corporation West Coast Studios is entering the final stages for the season of 1924-25 preparatory to clearing the boards for next season's work. Only one special remains to be put into production.

Emmett Flynn is at work on "Tainted Souls," an adaptation by Bernard McConville of "Sisters of Jesebel." In the cast are Madge Bellamy, Ethel Clayton, Alan Hale, Marion Harlan and Katherine Perry.

Tom Mix is just finishing up work on "The Rainbow Trail," sequel to his last Zane Grey picture, "Riders of the Purple Sage." The company is on location in the Yosemite Valley. Lynn Reynolds is directing. In the supporting cast are Anne Cornwall, Lucien Littlefield and George Bancroft.

"She Wolves," a screen version of Henry Miller's stage play, "The Man In Evening Clothes," has been prepared for production. Maurice Elvey will direct the picture. Alma Rubens will be seen in the feminine lead with Jack Mulhall in the leading male role.

The picture yet to be put in production on this year's Fox schedule is "Everyman's Wife." Work on it will soon be started, however, with John Conway wielding the megaphone.

Two of the Fox star series pictures are about completed. One is "The Timber Wolf," with Buck Jones, from a story by Jackson Gregory. Elinor Fair is seen in the feminine lead. Will Walling plays the heavy. The other is "Marriage in Transit," starring Edmund Lowe. It is a screen adaptation by Dorothy Yost and is directed by R. William Neill. Carole Lombard, a new screen find, is the leading lady. Frank Beal and Harvey Clark are in the cast.

One John Ford production for next season has been completed and another, by the same director, is well under way. The first, unnamed as yet, is a racing drama of the Blue Grass region. Henry B. Walthall is seen in the lead. Also featured is J. Farrell MacDonald, the "Casey" of the "Iron Horse." Others are Gertrude Astor, Malcolmn Waite and Belle Stoddard. "Once To Everyman," Ford's current production, has George O'Brien in the leading role. Billie Dove plays the feminine lead, and others in the cast are J. Farrell MacDonald, James Marcus, Diana Miller, Francis Powers, Lynn Cowan and Hank Mann.

Among the productions to come are the John Golden Unit of seven picutres, including "Lightnin'," "Seventh Heaven," "Thank-U," "The Wheel," "Chicken Feed," "The First Year" and "Howdy, Folks." These will be supplemented by "Havoc," "Lazybones," "The Everlasting Whisper," "The Outlaw," "Desert Valley," and many others.

Cecil B. De Mille Returns To Hollywood with Party

FRIDAY THE THIRTEENTH apparently means nothing to Cecil B. De Mille. This popularly supposed day of ill-omen marked the departure of De Mille and his party for Hollywood after seven weeks in New York City during which the director-general severed connections with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and formed his new alliance with Producers Distributing Corporation.

De Mille is not only totally lacking in the "13" superstition, but, according to his friends, he believes the number a lucky one. It so happens that his own and his father's name have thirteen letters, that he first left for Hollywood to start making pictures on November 13, 1912—two combinations of thirteen, and has started eight pictures on the thirteenth of the month.

F. C. Munroe, president of Producers Distributing Corporation, is accompanying De Mille to the coast. Others in the party include Julia Faye and Mrs. Louise Covell, Bertram Millhauser and Barrett C. Kiesling.

Jeanie Macpherson, who will continue as special writer for De Mille, and Mitchell Leisen, will not leave until next week. Mrs. E. K. Adams, chief reader, will remain in New York for several weeks to add to the list of plays and books being purchased for future De Mille use.

A renewal of an association which started when two stage-players left New York twelve years ago for Hollywood is seen in the announcement that De Mille has appointed Fred Kley studio manager of the new Cecil B. De Mille studio in Culver City.

It was Kley who went to California with De Mille to build the studio of the Jesse L. Lasky feature-play company. Since that time Kley has managed other large studios and is considered eminently qualified to handle the proposition of creating a new organization for the purpose of the $10,000,000 alliance Cecil De Mille has just made with Producers Distributing Corporation.

Edmund (formerly Edward) Burns has been signed for five years by Cecil B. De Mille. Burns will play in Bebe Daniels' new picture before going to the coast.

F. B. O. Production Program Hits on All Six Cylinders

THE departure of General Sales Manager Harry M. Berman for New York this week found the big F. B. O. production plant hitting on all cylinders, and allied producers busy at their respective cameras.

As a result of the week-long conference among production and sales executives, during which all angles of future business were gone over, a spirit of optimism pervades the studios. The next three months will doubtless be the busiest period in the history of the organization.

February 4th marked the launching of "That Devil Quemado" and the return of Fred Thomson to active work on the lot. Sound as a dollar again, eager to get into his stride, Fred took up where he left off several months ago when he was pitched from his horse and sustained a fractured thigh while filming "Thundering Hoofs." Del Andrews has been engaged by B. P. Fineman to direct the big Western star and world-famous athlete and his snow white charger, "Silver King."

Not the least important matter discussed by the assembled executives and branch managers from the Western division, was the new Brent series, in which Evelyn Brent will be starred by F. B. O. Miss Brent has just completed a sea story directed by Tom Buckingham and called "Forbidden Cargo." She is to do another series of eight melodramas, several of which will present the charming star in the role of a female crook.

Another important event was the starting of the new Dick Talmadge series of eight action dramas, the first of which, "Yellow Faces," is now in production. Under the terms of his new contract with Film Booking Offices, this agile young star will appear in more lavish attractions than in the past.

"Full speed ahead," is the slogan of "The Pacemakers," the H. C. Witwer prize college life series, the third episode of which is now being filmed under the direction of Wesley Ruggles. This series begins with promise of outstripping any other series ever made or distributed by Film Booking Offices. George O'Hara and Alberta Vaughn are being co-starred with Kit Guard and Al Cooke as comedians and Stan Taylor as juvenile heavy. Bea Van who adapted "The Fighting Blood" series, is serving in a like capacity with the new series. George Marion, Jr., is handling the titles with his inimitable humor.

Another important decision had to do with the shift in policy of the Lefty Flynn series. Flynn has become so popular as a result of his first series of F. B. O. Westerns that he will be put into more elaborate comedy—dramas of the type that swept the late Wallie Reid to fame. The first of the new series will be "Speed Wild" by H. H. Van Loan, in which the former Yale star will appear as a motor cop with a romantic turn of mind.

C. Gardner Sullivan is personally attending to the cutting and editing of his second independent production for F. B. O. the working title of which is "Mock Marriages." Emory Johnson is preparing to launch a new melodrama with the central character a young physician.

Among the independent producers at work on other lots for F. B. O. are Ben Wilson, filming the Yakima Canutt series, and Jesse Goldburg, making the Bob Custer Texas Rangers. F. Harmon Weight is stilll accepting congratulations for the splendid manner in which he directed the big special "Drusilla with a Million," which bids fair to be one of the outstanding attractions of the new season. He plans to resume work in a few weeks.

"Crimson Circle" Being Edited

George Ridgewell, who directed "The Crimson Circle," has just finished cutting and re-titling this film for the American market. "The Crimson Circle" is a society-detective drama, with new twists and angles.

Whitman Bennett Production For Associated Exhibitors Ready

"Back From the Dead," by Andrew Sartou, has been reproduced for screen presentation by Whitman Bennett under the title of "Back To Life," and is announced for release this week by the Associated Exhibitors. This is an H. Clay Miner production and presents Patsy Ruth Miller in the leading role. In support of Miss Miller are David Powell, Lawford Davidson, Mary Thurman, George Stewart, Frederick Burton and Frankie Evans.

The theme revolves in part around the post-war period, and has for its plot a dramatic story of a case of mistaken identity, which takes its rise from the wonderful progress made in the field of facial surgery during and following the great World War.

"Heart of a Temptress"

In conjunction with the completion of the filming of "Heart of a Temptress," the Sawyer-Lubin second Barbara La Marr starring production adapted from the Broadway stage play by William Hurlburt, "Hail and Farewell," the Sawyer-Lubin organization will begin an intensive advance exploitation and advertising campaign in the interests of this picture, with the two-fold purpose of acquainting franchise holders, exchanges and exhibitors with the selling possibilities of "Heart of Temptress," and also to supplement the campaign which will be instituted by First National from New York on this production.

Sawyer-Lubin will run a series of page tradepaper ads in the various tradepaper mediums.

The publicity department of Sawyer-Lubin will endeavor to furnish the exchanges and exhibitors with intelligent material for the advance exploitation of "Heart of a Temptress," and this material can be used with the sincere assurance that the production, directed by Phil Rosen and starring Barbara La Marr and Conway Tearle, will live up fully to anything which may be said about it.

Pathe Serial and Comedies Listed for Week of Feb. 22

THE tenth and final chapter of "Galloping Hoofs," a "Spat Family" comedy and a Mack Sennett comedy form the principal releases on the Pathe program for the week of Feb. 22nd.

In the Mack Sennett comedy which is entitled "Waterwagons," the principal comedy situations are based on a boat race. Andy Clyde as the father has invented a speed boat that is a combination submarine, automobile and sailing vessel. Madeline Hurlock as the girl, assists in the race, and all marine speed records are broken.

In the Hal Roach-"Spat Family" comedy, Frank Butler, Sidney Albrook and Laura Roessing manage to make a screaming situation out of a "Fox Hunt." Horses that refuse to be ridden, a fox that refuses to be the principal member of the hunt and other situations in this production combine to make this picture one of the funniest yet released in the "Sptas" series. Jay A. Howe is responsible for the direction of this production.

The tenth and final chapter of the Pathe serial, "Galloping Hoofs," completes the release of one of the most successful serials distributed by this organization. The title of this chapter is "Flying Colors" with the entire action of the plot centered in New York City. Allene Ray and Johnnie Walker, the principal players of the picture, have made a flying trip to the Metropolis in order to carry out the instructions of opening the mysterious box in the presence of the Emir of Innerwady. On the opening of the box it is disclosed that it contains an oil grant in the country over which the Emir is ruler.

A Grantland Rice "Sportlight" entitled "Sporting Armor," is one of the single reel subjects on the Pathe program for the week. Produced by John L. Hawkinson, this picture is based on the body protection worn by our modern athletes as compared to those worn by the knights of old.

The principal subject in Pathe Review No. 8 is an installment of the "Etiquette" series under the title of "Table Talk." This series is based on a few "Intimate Glimpses Into Social Life, and an Expose of Etiquette, Plus and Minus." Ths other subjects of the Review are: 'White Art," camera studies in the snow; and a Pathecolor of scenes of the City of Denver in the "Visiting Our Own America" series. The weekly release of Paul Terry's little zoological cartoon characters in Aesop's Film Fables is entitled "Fisherman's Luck." "Topics of the Day" No. 8 and Pathe News Nos. 18 and 19 complete the program.

Richard Talmadge Signs F. B. O. Starring Contract

THE insistent demands of exhibitors throughout the United States, Canada and the continent for more Richard Talmadge features, prompted Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., to sign the intrepid stunt actor to a new contract, where F. B. O. will produce five productions, starring Talmadge, on their own lot in Hollywood, according to an official announcement by Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and managing director of the company.

F. B. O. to Distribute

The Talmadge productions will be distributed by Film Booking Offices throughout the United States, Canada and abroad.

The new series will far surpass the previous Talmadge productions. They will be written especially for Talmadge by well known authors, and will be produced on a far more lavish scale than his initial efforts. The first, "Jimmie's Millions," by John Moroso, has just been completed, and will set a new record in stunt manouvres. "Jimmie's Millions," was directed by James P. Hogan, who won prominence by his masterly direction of the B. P. Schulberg special, "Capital Punishment."

The story was adapted by Frank Howard Clark, with William Marshall behind the camera. Betty Francisco is Mr. Talmadge's leading lady in the new production, with Charles Clary, Brinsley Shaw, Duck Sutherland, Ina Anson, Lee Moran and Wade Boteler prominent in support. "Jimmie's Millions" is set for March 1st release.

"Hot Water" in Philadelphia

Ten Theatres Play Harold Lloyd Comedy Day and Date

Philadelphia staged what was virtually a "Pathe Week," during the week of January 25th. "Hot Water," Harold Lloyd's latest feature production for Pathe, furnished the highlight of the week's program, appearing simultaneously on the screens of no less than ten theatres of the Quaker City. Pathe's short-subject attractions were also much in evidence in support of the Lloyd comedy, the "Our Gang" subjects and Aesop's Film Fables being especially singled out for comment on the part of local screen critics.

The houses presenting "Hot Water" (day and date) included the Colonial, Strand, Logan, Victoria, Benn, Leader, Fairmont, Imperial, Locust and Ambassador.

How to Use This Chart

First—Booking! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over—and under-length program.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and a fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

Power's G. E. Lamp

Recently certain inquiries caused me to make inquiry of the Nicholas Power Company concerning their high intensity lamp. As a result the following data were prepared and forwarded to this department for publication. I believe users of high intensity may and will find it both instructive and interesting. The matter prepared by the Power engineering department is published as written, without alteration. Here it is:

Data pertaining to the proper installation and operation of Power's G. E. high intensity lamp:

The high intensity arc has been the subject of a vast amount of study and experimentation. One of the latest and most interesting experiments was an exploration of the current-light characteristics. It was particularly desired to find how a 120 ampere electrode operated at, say, 90 amperes compared with an electrode designed for 90 amperes. Many of the picture houses have supply and converter equipment that is limited in capacity and they are thus not free to operate under the best conditions. It is often the case that 90 or 100 amperes is the limit of current and the lamp in this case is run far below rating. The attached curve shows what happens under these conditions.

Standard Condensers

In making these tests the lamp was equipped with standard condensers and the light was projected as previously described. The 120 ampere electrodes were operated at 120, 110, 100 and 90 amperes. Taking the light received on the screen at the highest current as 100 per cent the other currents gave 81 per cent, 62 per cent and 41 per cent. We may, therefore, say that when near normal rating the light falls off 2.3 times as fast as the current. Thus, if the current is lowered by 10 per cent the light falls off 23 per cent. If the current is dropped to 90 amperes, a decrease of 25 per cent, the light will decrease 59 per cent. If, on the other hand, an electrode designed for 90 amperes were used, the loss of light would be only 30 per cent. We may make the comparison in another way. A 75 ampere standard electrode at 75 amperes will give as much light on the screen as a 120 ampere electrode at 97 amperes. There are many factors to be considered in an actual installation that have not been mentioned here, but the figures given above show that in choosing the lamp or the current the high intensity arc must be considered as a new and different light to which the older rules of arc practice do not apply.

In addition to the above, the following data compiled in our own research laboratory should prove of inestimable value in the selling and installation of high intensity equipment.

More Data

The optical system to be used and the principal constants are as follows: Condenser combination should be 6½ inches focal length plano convex nearest the arc and 9 or 9½ inches plano convex farthest from the arc. This 9 or 9½-inch focal length condenser should preferably be 5 inches in diameter, while the 6½-inch focal length condenser should be 4½ inches in diameter. Condensers should be placed with their convex surfaces together and so spaced that their convex tips are within not to exceed ⅛ inch of each other. Spacing should be preferably done by means of an adjustable spacing device.

The condensing lens mount as a unit should also be adjustable vertically and laterally, in order that the condensers may be properly placed on the optical axis, and the spot properly focussed upon the aperture plate. The lamp should be mounted so that the center of the positive carbon is parallel to and exactly upon the optical axis, after which the lamp should be locked in this position, and the only adjustment then necessary is one through which the lamp may be moved laterally to and from the plano surfaces of the 6½-inch condenser. The average distance from the arc to the plano surface of the 6½-inch condenser is 3½ inches.

Size of Spot

The size of the spot on the aperture plate of a properly adjusted high intensity arc is somewhat confusing to one who has been used to handling the ordinary type of arc lamp, since the spot from the high intensity arc is very much larger and somewhat hazy in outline. This large spot is necessary, however, due to the fact that all of the available and useable light comes from the core of the carbon and very little from the shell, and the light which does come from the shell is of a yellow nature and is not useable for projection purposes. Therefore the spot will be somewhat larger on the aperture plate than the size of the regular arc spot.

100 Ampere Lamps

In a great number of cases theatre owners and projectionists insist on having 100 ampere high intensity lamps. In these 100 ampere high intensity lamps it is necessary for them to use what are known as 13.6 mm. positive carbons. These carbons work at their highest efficiency only when burned at 120 amperes and if burned below this amperage their efficiency drops off tremendously. It is, therefore, true that where the 120 ampere carbon is burned much below the 120 ampere rated capacity far superior results would be obtained by the use of a 75 ampere carbon known as the 11 mm carbon burned at a trifle above its maximum carrying capacity, viz, 80 amperes. It is true that if the 75 ampere carbon is burned at 80 amperes the amount of light given off will far exceed the light given off by the 120 ampere carbon when burned at 100 amperes.

Hundred Readings Taken

One hundred readings in two separate groups of fifty each were taken in order to determine the above fact and the data of this test are as follows: The current and termina. voltages at which the test was made were:

90 amperes, 60 volts at lamp terminals.
100 amperes, 63 volts at lamp terminals.
110 amperes, 66 volts at lamp terminals.
120 amperes, 70 volts at lamp terminals.

Taking the output at 120 amperes as 100 per cent the other currents gave percentages as below:

90 amperes 42 per cent.
95 amperes 51 per cent.
100 amperes 61 per cent.
105 amperes 71 per cent.
110 amperes 80 per cent.
115 amperes 90 per cent.
120 amperes 100 per cent.

If all of the above data are borne in mind and the proper adjustments as called for made when high intensity equipment is installed, surprising results will be obtained, but it is impossible to get satisfactory results with high intensity lamps unless all of the dimensions above set forth are strictly adhered to, and particularly is this true with regard to the optical system.

Took Exception

I took exception to certain things contained in the foregoing, and questioned the proposition of using a five-inch converging condenser lens. I was unable to see where there could be any possible advantage in the use of such a lens, and informed the Nicholas Power Company of that fact, whereupon I was invited down to the factory. I did go down, in company with John Griffith, Ansonia, Conn., and Arthur Gray, Boston, Mass. We went over the whole matter very thoroughly, examined the floor of the high intensity crater by means of a dowser pin hole, as hereinafter described, arriving at the conclusion that under the peculiar conditions incident to high intensity there is advantage in using the five-inch diameter converging lens.

Difficult to Explain

It is very difficult to set this matter forth in print in a way that it may be readily understood, but I will nevertheless try to do it. In the first place, when using a high-intensity arc it is essential to good results that the spot at the aperture be quite large—very much larger than is the practice where the ordinary arc is used. The reason for this is found in the fact that, as the test showed, the high intensity carbon has a very large core which gives off a very brilliant, bluish white, penetrating light. This core is surrounded by a thin shell of much harder material, which under normal burning conditions gives off a light of very much less brilliancy—in fact, of a decided light orange color. This is due to the fact that the core of the carbon reaches a very much higher temperature than does the carbon material with which it is surrounded.

Remembering that the spot is in fact a more-or-less in focus image of the crater itself, from the foregoing you will see that it is only desirable to allow the light emanating from the core of the carbon to reach the screen, which means that the image of the core must cover the aperture, all the rest of the image of the crater falling on the cooling plate. This is the reason for necessity of the large spot.

So Far So Good

So far so good. I will now try to explain to you the advantage of the five-inch converging lamps. The use of the large spot operates to bring the light source relatively close to the converging lens, which operates to increase the divergence of the beam sent forward to the converging lens by the collector lens, therefore the increase in diameter of the converging lens permits it to pick up light which would otherwise be wasted.

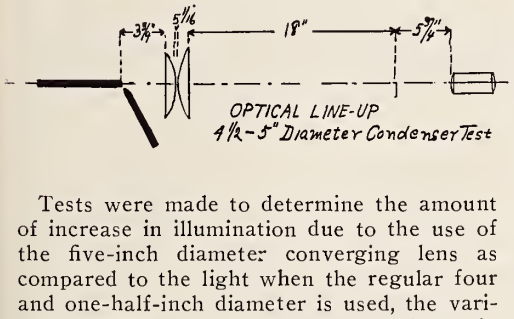
But, you ask, admitting the truth of all this, how is that light going to get through into the projection lens under ordinary conditions? A fair question, but one I'm not so certain I am able to answer. I know we did arrive at some conclusion in reference to this important point while studying the matter, but I don't seem to be able to remember what it was, or to again dope it out to my own satisfaction. I shall therefore ask Brother Griffith to set forth his explanation of that particular thing.

What I Do Know

And now to get back to the things I do understand. From what has been said, it has readily been seen that if the image of the crater be focussed sharply at the aperture, and be made so small that the light from the outer carbon shell is permitted to pass through the aperture, the brilliancy of the light on the screen will be reduced in proportion to the amount of such light transmitted. It is also true that since the image of the core should only be large enough to cover the aperture, if it be not properly centered thereon, then the screen field will not be clear. By maintaining a spot at the aperture large enough to allow only the light from the core of the carbon to pass through, it is possible to secure a very fairly even illumination over the entire screen surface. Projectionists will, however, do well not to underestimate the importance of having the high intensity crater exactly on the optical axis, and all parts of the optical system of the projector in proper alignment.

The Five-Inch Lens

The company supplies with its high intensity lamp a collector lens of four and one-half-inch diameter, six and one-half-inch focal length, and a nine-inch focal length, five-inch diameter, converging lens, both plano convex. They recommend this condenser combination as best for use with the high intensity lamp.



Tests were made to determine the amount of increase in illumination due to the use of the five-inch diameter converging lens as compared to the light when the regular four and one-half-inch diameter is used, the various distance adjustments being as shown in the accompanying drawing. During this test the aerial image was examined, as also were the images of the collector lens and the converging lens when using both the four and one-half and the five-inch diameter lenses. They were evenly illuminated, clear and sharply cut at the edges.

Report of test made to determine difference in light passed by 4½-inch diameter and 5-inch diameter converging condensers, with G. E. 100 ampere, high intensity arc lamp, Beck System:

This test was made in the presence of F. H. Richardson, John Griffith and Arthur Gray. All adjustments of the lamp and optical system were made by our Mr. Bowen, and photometer readings were taken by our Mr. Schulze. The accompanying sketch shows the optical line-up.

The projection lens used was a "Cinephor" No. 2, 7.75 inch E. F. The collector lens was 6½-inch focus by 4½-inch diameter. The converging lens was 9-inch focus by 5-inch diameter, which in the second part of the test was changed to a 9-inch focus by 4½-inch diameter. The size of the illuminated screen was 5 feet 8½ inches by 4 feet 3 inches, or 24.25 square feet.

Two absorption filters were used in the photometer, No. 92882 and factor 10.75 and No. 81196, factor 1.8, the combined factor of these two filters being 19.35. The following readings were taken and the number of screen lumens calculated from the average photometer readings for the 5-inch diameter and the 4½-inch diameter converging condensers:

Five-Inch Diameter Condensers

	Amperes	Volts	Photometer
1	121	67	7
2	122	65	7
3	121	67	6.4
4	121	67	7
5	122	66	6.8
6	122	66	6.9
7	122	67	6.9
8	118	68	6.8
9	120	67	6.7
10	123	65	6.8
Average	121.2	66.5	6.8

Screen lumens 6.8x19.35x24.25 equals 3190.8.
Lumens per ampere: 3190.8

121.2 equals 26.3.

4½-Inch Diameter Condenser

	Amperes	Volts	Photometer
1	122	65	6
2	122	66	5.9
3	121	67	6.2
4	120	67	6.2
5	119	68	6
6	119	68	6.2
7	119	67	5.9
8	120	68	5.8
9	120	68	5.9
10	120	68	5.7
Average	120.2	67.2	5.98

Screen lumens 5.98x19.35x24.25 equals 2805.7.
Lumens per ampere: 2805.7

120.2 equals 23.3.

It will be seen from the above that 3190.8 lumens of light were obtained on the screen with the 5-inch diameter condenser as compared with only 2805.7 lumens with the 4½-inch, a difference of 285.1 lumens, or 12 per cent. With the 5-inch diameter condenser 26.3 lumens per ampere were obtained compared with only 23.3 lumens per ampere with the 4½-inch diameter condenser, a difference of 3 lumens per ampere, or 11 per cent.

Examining the Crater

While burning a 13.6 millimeter high intensity carbon at 120 amperes, which is the highest point of efficiency for this carbon diameter, a pin hole image of the carbon crater was projected on a white cardboard at the aperture through a pin hole in the center of the dowser. The appearance of the crater image at the aperture was that of a circle of light about 1½ inches in diameter which was made up of two distinct rings, the center being about 1 inch in diameter and of a rather brilliant white color. This center spot was surrounded by a circle of light of a light orange color. It was noticed that the central spot was covered at intervals by a fluctuating brown shadow caused by the arc flame passing in front of the carbon crater, and that this shadow was never entirely absent. The current at the arc was reduced to approximately 95 amperes, and it was noted that the fluctuating brown shadow was almost entirely absent. The central spot, however, had been reduced in diameter to approximately three-quarters of an inch.

It was also noted that the outside diameter of this central spot is quite sharply defined, and that the division between the central spot and the outside surrounding ring is very marked. The outside surrounding ring had also darkened considerably, and appeared as a very light brown color.

The current at the arc was then reduced to approximately 87 amperes, whereupon the color of this outer ring changed to a yellowish brown, and the central spot to a very noticeable blue. This blue color is probably due to the flame turning to a very brilliant blue, and as the flame passes over the crater its color is noticed in the pin hole image being projected.

Bluebook School—Answers 196-200

Question No. 196—Is it advisable to have the picture overlap the border? Give reasons for your answer.

G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, S. D.; Carlisle A. Anglemire, Nazareth, Pa.; A. Baron, Lodi, Cal.; Walter Johnson, Champaign, Ill.; Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Mass.; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, N. M.; F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Ont., and Wm. A. Burnet, Newton, Iowa, all expressed views regarding this matter which are creditable.

Dobson says:

Where there is a border around the picture, it should overlap the edges of the screen image by from two to three inches. Such overlapping will tend to mask or hide any slight swaying or movement of the picture as a whole; it will also render invisible, though, small particles of dust which may, and often do accumulate on the edges of the projector aperture.

Gray says:

Inasmuch as the need for, or advisability of using a border around the picture should be established before we consider the question of allowing the picture to overlap thereon, and, furthermore, inasmuch as questions 195-196-197 are to a certain extent reciprocal, I believe a single answer to the three questions combined will be as effective a way as any of attempting to cover the matters involved.

It has long been considered good projection practice to surround the picture with a border of flat black material, and while there recently has been a tendency toward some experimental excursioning into the browns and grays for a border color, I think that we gain some advantage through using flat black which cannot be equalled when we introduce color—even though it be in subdued form—into the border immediately surrounding the picture.

A border ten inches to two feet wide all around the picture is sufficient to accomplish all purposes hereinafter discussed, although this width is not arbitrary, and may be increased almost indefinitely, if it seems necessary or advisable to construct a surrounding to act as a shadow box.

Reasons

It has often been said that a black border makes the picture seem brighter by reason of the contrast it sets up. It seems to me that even if this is not true in the sense that it causes the high lights in the picture to appear brighter and the shadows darker (and the term "contrast" can only mean that, since the border cannot actually alter the light value of the field in the slightest degree), it does have the effect of apparently raising the screen brilliancy.

The black border tends to keep the eye at all times concentrated on the entire area upon which the picture is being projected, regardless of varying film densities. It really acts to "place" the entire light field in the vision, and to keep it there. Without a black border, in many cases at least, a dark picture will lose form, the outlining dimensions becoming obliterated and blending into the surrounding shadows, so that when a dark scene, or a title with a dense background is followed by a bright scene, the eye really goes through a process of relocating the extent of the light field.

Eye Strain

This process of attempting to locate the edge of the picture is a conscious one, and to a certain extent really constitutes an additional and unnecessary eye strain. Put in another way, the black border not only clearly and definitely delineates the extent of the light field, but it also acts to constantly emphasize its existence. The foregoing may be questioned, or even disputed, but it is the opinion I have formed as a result of such analysis as I have been able to make of the matter.

A flat black material possesses the property of absorbing almost all of the light that becomes incident upon it, hence any part of the picture projected upon such a border becomes to all intents and purposes invisible.

We may utilize this light-absorbing characteristic of the black border for several valuable purposes. I think it is in all cases advisable to allow the light field to overlap on the border to a minimum depth or width of about two inches, and if the projection axis be perpendicular to the plane of the screen surface, we shall obtain a true rectangular picture, in which case this two-inch overlap will be of equal width all around. We thus render invisible the out-of-focus blur of the aperture outline, along with its invariably accompanying rim of color dispersion caused, apparently, by reflection from the bright inside edge of the aperture. We thus eliminate this fringe from the visible picture, and in so doing obtain a clear-cut picture outline.

Keystone Effect

If there is a keystone effect by reason of projection angle, we may remove, or at least greatly reduce this outline distortion by proper arrangement of the edges of the border. This latter is of especial importance where the projectors are spaced a considerable distance apart, and where it is impossible to get an accurate registration of the projector aperture outlines themselves. The border also enables us to effect corners that are symmetrical in size and curvature, which would be impossible if the keystone effect existed and the picture were not thus masked.

If there is any sway or vibration in the projector itself, the effect to the observer will be minimized if the picture overlaps on a black border, provided, however, that the amount of movement does not exceed the distance of the overlap. This effect would appear particularly bad if the picture outline matches the border outline, because under these conditions what amounts virtually to a gauge is provided, by means of which the eye can and will measure or see the exact extent of the movement.

One further advantage of the overlap is that it conceals the shadow of the fine particles of dirt and dust which invariably collect around the edges of the projector aperture during the process of projection, which same sometimes defies all efforts at dislodgement until the reel has been finished. This is not intended to in any sense excuse habitually dirty aperture edges, but we all know the practical impossibility of preventing an occasional deposit of this kind.

To Sum Up

To sum up: there seems to be many points of advantage in surrounding the picture with a flat black border, and allowing the light field to overlap thereon to the suggested depth. On the other hand, there seems to be nothing in favor of allowing the raw image of the edge of the projector aperture to bound the extent of the light field on the screen. Apparently there is one single argument in favor of the neutral and graduated grays and browns for a border, as advocated by one of the large laboratories that has given us much valuable research data, but I think the advantage gained by this arrangement is greatly overweighed by the many other advantages which may be obtained by the combination of the conventional flat black border and picture overlap.

Able Discussion

The editor wishes to remark that this seems to him to be a remarkably able discussion of the whole screen border and color overlap matter. There are those who object to the black border as setting up a too-vivid contrast, but while I have every respect for the ability of some of the gentlemen who hold this view, I have nevertheless found myself unable to agree with it. My own view of this whole matter is that the picture should overlap a minimum of two, and a maximum of three inches on flat black, which may be either flat black paint or black cloth, preferably velvet. The black should be at least two or three inches wider than the overlap, and may extend beyond that for any reasonable distance, usually not exceeding two feet, gradually shading off into tints which will harmonize with the surrounding decorations. If the flat black is narrow, then the shading should extend from eighteen inches to three feet beyond.

I believe the matter is very completely and thoroughly covered by the foregoing replies.

Question No. 197—What various purposes does the picture border serve?

All the before named replied satisfactorily, or stated the obvious fact that this question is necessarily fully answered in replying to Question No. 196. This being the case, it would be a mere waste of space to publish answers to this question.

Question No. 198—Where the stage floor extends for a considerable distance in front of the screen, and it is practicable to do so, why should the stage floor be painted dead black?

Cooley, Bennewitz and Burnett all replied essentially to the same effect, which, however, is perhaps best set forth by Hanover, who says:

If the stage floor be not thus painted, or covered with a dark, light-absorbing material, such as an asbestos mat in dark colors, an annoying glare of light will be reflected from the stage floor to the eyes of every theatre patron seated in the balcony, or in any seat from which the stage floor is visible. This glare will, of course, be annoying in proportion to its amount, and its amount will be dependent upon several things, one of which will be the color and amount of polish of the stage floor itself.

In the very nature of things, such glare cannot but have the effect of diminishing the brilliancy and contrast of and in the picture itself to any patron to which it is visible. It therefore follows that the effect of its elimination by the means suggested cannot be otherwise than beneficial.

Question No. 199—Give us your views as to the desirability or advisability of using tinted screen surfaces?

Bennewitz, Dobson, Gray, Cooley, Johnson, Moore, Hanover, Burnett and Anglemire all gave satisfactory answers to this, for the most part expressing the same ideas. I believe on the whole Hanover again has made the reply best suited for publication. He says:

This question covers a very wide field indeed. To answer it comprehensively and completely would, I am afraid, consume a great deal of space. The only argument in favor of introducing color into the screen surface is that of mellowing or toning the light—or at least if there is any other argument, I have never heard of it.

It is freely granted that toning down the harshness of the light from a high power alternating current arc is desirable, and there are many who favor the proposition of toning the light of the high intensity arc, which, incidentally, is said to contain a large percentage of ultra violet rays.

I am not myself competent to judge as to whether or not such toning of the high intensity represents good practice, but I do say that if color toning is to be introduced, the surface of the screen is not the place for its introduction.

Any introduction of toning color must, in order to have a consistently good effect, be so arranged that it may be introduced or cut out at the will of the projectionist. This is because in modern practice a large percentage of the films are themselves tinted, and certainly the introduction of, for instance, yellow into the blue light or the green light of a tinted film would not serve any good purpose, and might very easily prove harmful.

Of course color introduced into the screen surface becomes a permanent, nonchangeable fixture, upon which, or into which all colors used in tinted film must be projected. I think this one thing alone is a quite sufficient answer to Question No. 199, since it sets up what seems to me to be an insurmountable objection to a tinted screen surface. It might, however, be further remarked that the introduction of color into the screen surface tends automatically to reduce its apparent brilliancy.

Question No. 200—If the screen is to be located on the stage, what advice would you offer the manager with regard to it?

Gray, Bennewitz, Dobson, Burnett, Cooley, Johnson, Anglemire and Hanover came through on this one. Again I think Hanover has sent the reply best suited to publication, though Dobson, Bennewitz and Cooley all made a close second. Hanover says:

This question presents two separate and distinct propositions, namely: for the theatre which, while it has a stage, uses nothing but pictures, and for the theatre which uses both vaudeville and pictures, or which stages elaborate prologues, tabloids, etc.

In the first instance my recommendation to the manager would be that a line be stretched from the front seat on either side to and past the procenium arch, and that the screen be located as far back as these lines will indicate that the patrons seated in either of these seats may see the entire screen, provided that in such location the top of the procenium arch does not shut off the view of patrons seated in the highest balcony. In practise this usually will mean the placing of the screen at or near the back wall of the stage, though I would ordinarily recommend that the screen be set away from the back wall by three or four feet, in order to allow a passage way from one side of the stage to the other, which usually is desirable.

Put in another form, I would recommend the location of the screen in such a theatre to be back as far as possible, except for the three or four foot passageway suggested, provided that in such location its entire area is visible to all patrons.

I would also recommend in such a theatre, that the screen frame be substantial, rigid, and permanently located. I would also recommend, in such a theatre, the installation of a screen having diffusing powers suitable to the viewing angles of the theatre, and if the house be one in which a high power of diffusion is required, I would recommend a surface which could be painted, and the said surface readily removed for the substitution of a similar surface after it had become too heavily laden with paint from recoatings. This latter recommendation I would make because it is possible to prepare a painted surface having both high reflective and diffusing powers, and to prepare it at relatively low cost—also to renew it cheaply.

For Other Theatres

For the theatre using vaudeville and pictures, or pictures and an elaborate prologue, tabloid, etc., all the foregoing would hold good, except that it is both advisable and necessary to instal a secondary screen in "one," on which the picture may be projected while the stage is being set or cleared.

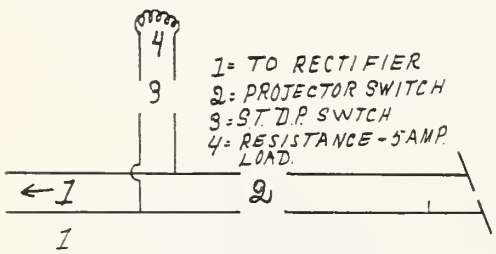
I would recommend that this screen be mounted on a rigid counter-balanced frame, sliding, if possible, in groves, or on tightly stretched locating wire cables attached to eyebolts in the floor at the side of the stage, and eyebolts in the grid, though it is also possible to accomplish the same thing, in rather an unsatisfactory way, by attaching iron locating pins to the bottom of the screen, the same to be guided into receiving holes or sockets in the stage floor.

If for any reason the foregoing plan is impracticable, or undesirable, then I would recommend that the screen consist of a suitable muslin attached to a rigid perfectly straight top bar, and to a heavy, perfectly straight bar at its lower edge. Such a screen is highly undesirable however, because of the fact that almost always there are more or less strong air currents on a theatre stage, hence a non rigid screen surface is bound to move, or sway more or less.

Tube Breakage

Recently Walter Peterson, Brigham City, Utah, told us of the arms breaking off his rectifier tubes right close up to the main chamber. I could see no reason for this, so referred the matter to the General Electric Rectifier Department. Their engineers say:



We have never known of a case where a mercury arc rectifier tube has failed because of cold weather (Peterson said the weather had been very cold, and the projection room, where the rectifier is located, unheated), but under the conditions described it is quite possible this might happen.

Under the conditions encountered in motion picture projection installations, it is impossible to put the tube on a light load to warm it up, therefore if the situation is such that the tube gets very cold, we would suggest that it be warmed by a bank of lamps, or by a small electric heater—the sort which has a copper reflector. This, however, should not be placed too close to the bulb, as the warming up should be done gently.

From another General Electric source it has been suggested that the warming up of the tube might be done by constructing a shunt resistance load of about six or seven amperes. This could easily be done, connecting it as per drawing, on rectifier side of projector table switch. If any one is troubled with unusual tube breakage in very cold weather, this plan might be tried, or an electric heater of the kind suggested obtained. The resistance load would, however, be best, I think. The resistance can be made of No. 10 iron wire supported on insulators—well away from all inflammable material, of course.

Everything "Jake"

William Burnett, Projectionist, Newton, Iowa, one of the Bluebook "scholars" sent in his optical line-up with request that it be checked up and criticised. The crater impressions showed 24/64ths diameter. The line-up is 6½ meniscus collector lens. 7½ bi-convex converging lens. Crater distance 3 3/8 inches, Y distance 16 inches. Bausch and Lomb projection lens with 4 inch working distance and 1 13 16 inches free opening. Crater angle 56 degrees. Shutter blades reduced to fit local condition. Uses 40 amperes D. C.

I doped it out as a correct line-up, but to be certain, submitted the figures to Griffith, who says:

Brother Burnett, of Newton, Iowa, seems to have his line-up about right. Just a trifle too long a projection lens working distance, but the meniscus collector takes care of that. A Cinephor parabolic converging lens, with a meniscus collector would improve matter some, but not a whole lot.

So that's that, brother Burnett. My compliments on your intelligent interpretation of modern practice.

Film Damage?

What's the Real Cause?

By F. H. RICHARDSON

(This is the last photograph of the series supplied by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, made under the supervision of Earl K. Denison.)

The accompanying photograph is one of the finest possible visual illustrations of the lack of any real necessity for excessive film damage. You will observe that, as Mr. Denison says in his caption, this film has been projected at a somewhat excessive speed, 4,700 times. You will also observe that this magnified photograph shows no evidence of any distortion of, or abrasion of, the edges of the sprocket holes. You will also take note that there are no perceptible scratches, or other visible damage of this film which has been projected such an enormous number of times.

We may assume that the projector sprockets were in essentially perfect condition and that there was no excessive tension at the aperture. Of course, the film was not subjected to the action of the magazine fire trap, nor to the possible tremendous abuse of a worn takeup sprocket, with possibly wrongly adjusted idlers and also excessive takeup tension. It was also not subjected to the usual more or less fearful abuse in the process of rewinding.

However, always provided the projectionist understands his business and religiously attends to it, and further provided that he is not prevented by a too economical, or purely penurious theatre management from obtaining the repair parts necessary to keep his projector mechanism in perfect repair, there is no reason why regular projection should subject the film to any considerable amount of damage other than would be inflicted on the loop of film here shown.

One of the finest illustrations of the possibilities for avoiding film damage which I have ever known of, came under my observation in the old days—about 1907, I think it was—when George K. Spoor, Chicago, Ill. rented a service to theatres which comprised the projector (the Kinedrome projector), the film and the projectionist. The projectionist was held responsible for any and all unnecessary damage to the films placed in his charge. Under ordinary service, films in that day, as now, lasted but a very short time—possibly three months. With the George K. Spoor Kinedrome service it was very different. The projectionist, knowing that he was to be held responsible for any damage he did to the films, was very careful. He was supplied with all necessary repairs for his projectors, and it was up to him to see that they were kept in perfect repair and adjustment.

I have personally examined kinedrome service films after they had been used every day for a period of five or six months, and have found them to be in essentially perfect condition—apparently, though of course not actually, good for another six months' run.

This has always left fixed in my mind the impression that about nine-tenths of all film damage is due primarily to lack of proper procedure in the handling and use of the films. It is an astounding thing, but it is nevertheless a fact that films are subjected to more or less (usually MORE rather than less) abuse from the moment they are removed from the manufacturer's shipping can in the exchange, until the time they are finally—usually in an absurdly short time—discarded as junk.

The abuse begins by winding the new film on an old, decrepit, bent-up "tin" reel, on a rewinder the elements of which are badly out of line, operated at high speed by an exchange employee. They are sent to the theatre more or less well packed, placed on a projector which is often in a wretched state of repair, with an abominably heavy tension, both at the aperture and the takeup. They are rewound at a high speed on poor reels, on a rewinder totally and absolutely unfit for use. They are spliced "any old way," and at the end of the run are chucked into a shipping can "any old way."

Now don't imagine that I am accusing everyone of doing things thus. We now have many, many high-class projectionists who are careful and painstaking in their work. They keep their projectors in excellent repair and correct adjustment. They rewind intelligently, repair the films carefully and pack the reel for reshipment to the exchange as well as anyone could possibly do.

On the other hand, we still have with us the "moving picture machine operator," who is and only pretends to be a machine at-

Console of a Page organ. The manufactur ers have received from many musicians and exhibitors written and verbal tributes as to the wonderful tone and efficiency of this instrument.

Tribute Paid to Page Organ by Many Musicians of Note

By TOM WALLER

THE merits of the Page organ, its particular aptitude for the exhibitor from the standpoint of economy of wonderful music at a lowest price, are attested in letters from leading organists and musicians to the Page Organ Company. An official of that organization, John Seifert, exhibited some of these written tributes to Moving Picture World on his recent visit to Manhattan.

One of the outstanding points of the Page instrument is its roll device. In regard to this Mr. Seifert commented:

"The roll device is played with any regular eighty-eight note piano roll and the operator is enabled to produce results that are hard to obtain even with a very competent organist. The instrument is in itself a real necessity for the exhibitor, especially where the house is too small to employ an orchestra. Some of our customers have abolished the use of orchestras after installing our instrument."

The headquarters of the Page Organ Company is located in Lima, Ohio. Writing of a visit to the factory, Rienzi Thomas has this to say:

"I have played in all of the large cities in this country and in Europe. I never played upon any with as complete satisfaction as on this organ manufactured here in Lima. I most thoroughly enjoyed it and its complete capabilities.

"The action is wonderfully responsive, and one thing in particular which I found in this organ over the others I have played is that no matter how fast the technic, there was no blurring, a fault which is very common in the majority of organs. This is the one organ I have derived complete satisfaction in the execution of all trills."

Letters containing similar laudatory comments are also from the organist of the Marvin Theatre, Findlay, O.; the Adams Music Shop, Lima, O.; Grand Theatre, Columbus, O. and many others.

New Batavia Theatre

Jacob and Samuel Farber will open their new picture theatre in Batavia, N. Y., on April 10 at 53-55 Jackson street. The Farbers are holding a contest in co-operation with a local newspaper to obtain a name for the theatre. The house, which will have an exclusive picture policy, will cost $150,000 and seat 1200. It is 150 feet deep and 60 feet wide and is constructed entirely of steel, concrete and brick. A fly loft has been installed so that vaudeville can be used if the policy is changed. There will be a $25,000 organ. The house is furnished throughout with Haywood Wakefield leather chairs. There is a large marquee with changeable electric lights. The balcony and mezzanine are furnished with wicker chairs. There will be free phone and ice water service for patrons. Stanley frames will be used in the lobby and projection will be furnished by Powers machines. The ventilating system is the Typhoon type. Ladies and gentlemen's rest rooms will be on the main floor.

The New Academy in Ironton is Opened

The New Academy Theater, of Ironton, Mo., replacing the old structure destroyed by fire a year ago, is now firmly established in its new building. The old Academy of Music was erected in 1882 at a cost of about $3,500, and served the community for more than forty years. Three years ago the building was purchased by A. P. Schaefer, and after the fire, he decided to erect an up-to-date structure on the site.

The new theater is constructed of granite, with concrete floors. It measures one hundred and twenty by thirty-six and one-half feet, and is twenty feet in height. The auditorium is fifty by thirty-seven feet, with a stage thirty-seven by seventeen feet. The house has a seating capacity of 600. The seats are arranged on an inclined floor, which provides an unobstructed view of the screen. The building is equipped and furnished with modern fixtures, and changing lights are an added attraction.

tendant. Such men, or some of them, at least, are very careless in the matter of repairs to the projector, and in the adjustment of the apparatus. Between the two —the high-class projectionist and the machine attendant of the most inefficient type —there are many gradations, and according to the gradation will be the amount of abuse the film is subjected to, always with the notation that neither the high-class projectionist nor the moving picture machine operator can avoid film abuse unless the theatre management itself will supply him with the things necessary to keep the apparatus in perfect condition.

We should also make notation of the fact that many exchanges are now using intelligent methods in the handling of their own films, trying earnestly to stop the abuse for which, in the past, exchanges were to a large extent responsible.

MacGuire, Not McClure

No, P. A. MacGuire, advertising manager of Nicholas Power, is quite satisfied with his name. Just because the printers made it "McClure" last week in Moving Picture World is no indication that he's leaving the projection advertising field for that of the fiction magazine. The error occurred in the caption under Mr. MacGuire's picture. Sorry.

The ROBERT MORTON "a Masterpiece" ORGAN

Gentlemen:

On Sunday Nov. 16th, I experienced the greatest thrill I have ever had on any organ bench. Our new "ROBERT MORTON" is the finest organ I have had the pleasure to play on.

The splendid voicing and beautiful tone, the fastest action I have ever seen, the second touch in a class by itself AND construction, truly the "ROBERT MORTON" is a masterpiece.

I was somewhat skeptical due to unfair remarks of competitors. But, I now say with all sincerity, that my wildest dreams of a wonderful organ were more than realized.

Wishing that every organist had as wonderful an instrument as the "ROBERT MORTON", I am,

Very truly yours,

L. Earl Abel

Dear Sir:-

I just can't refrain from expressing my feelings, and voicing the sentiments of all my patrons regarding the new "Robert-Morton" Organ recently installed in my theatre.

It is not just another organ, but a work of ART. The material, design and workmanship, are the best I have ever seen; and as for tonal quality - well my box office speaks for that as I have broken my records twice in the two weeks it has been completed. I give the organ this credit, because the pictures were very ordinary, but the organ concert given on this day even brought people here in wheel chairs.

If any exhibitor doubts the superiority of the "Robert-Morton" Organ, tell him to arm himself with an unbiased organ builder and an organist, and he has my permission to put this instrument through the paces, and I am confident that he too will join me in pronouncing "the Robert-Morton" the finest theatre organ built.

With best wishes for your deserved success, I remain,

Very truly yours,

Earle J. Johnson
